BY WILLIAM H. MCGUFFEY,

PRESIDENT OF CINCINNATI COLLEGE—LATE PROFESSOR IN MIAMI UNIVERSITY, OXFORD.

Enlarged, Improved, and Stereotyped.

SIXTH EDITION.

CINCINNATI:
PUBLISHED BY TRUMAN AND SMITH.
1838.

ECLECTIC SERIES OF SCHOOL BOOKS.

THE ECLECTIC SERIES has been undertaken by a few untiring laborers in the cause of education, for the purpose of furnishing a complete, uniform and improved set of school books, commencing with the alphabet. The books are commended by intelligent teachers.

ARITHMETICAL COURSE.

RAY'S ECLECTIC ARITHMETIC, on the inductive and analytic methods of instruction. Designed for common schools and academies. By Joseph Ray, Professor of Mathematics in Woodward College, and late Teacher of Arithmetic in that Institution. Stereotyped.

RAY'S LITTLE ARITHMETIC, containing intellectual exercises for young beginners, and designed to precede the "ECLECTIC ARITHMETIC." Prepared expressly for the Eclectic Series. Stereotyped.

RAY'S TABLES AND RULES IN ARITHMETIC. For young children. Prepared for the Eclectic Series. Stereotyped.

This system of Arithmetic is the result of many years' labor, which the author entered upon (in compliance with the earnest solicitation of many friends of education,) with a view of preparing a standard work, which would justify general use in schools. The effort has proved completely successful. The ease and rapidity with which even very young pupils can learn arithmetic from these books is highly gratifying. The author is a practical, ingenious and successful teacher. He has instructed children and youth of all ages and grades; and well knows what a school book ought to be.

READING COURSE.

THE ECLECTIC READERS, by Mr. McGuffey (advertised on the first page of this volume), were much needed. They have already been widely introduced into schools of the city and country. Numerous instructors, who are practically acquainted with their merits, from having used them with great success in teaching, pronounce them unequalled aids to the young learner, in this important branch of a primary education. Forty thousand copies of these READERS have been sold in a few months.

Entered according to act of Congress, in the year 1837,

BY TRUMAN AND SMITH,

in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of Ohio.

PREFACE.

This volume completes the series of "Eclectic Readers." It treads in the steps of its predecessors, so far as principle is concerned. The main difference between this and the "Third Eclectic Reader" is, that the rules are more specific—the exemplifications more numerous—the list of errors more extended—and the interrogations more copious, embracing a wider range, and requiring a more vigorous exercise of thought, in order to intelligent, and intelligible answers.

The selections for the present volume, are of a higher grade of literary and intellectual excellence. The mind of the pupil is presumed to have improved, and expanded, as he advanced through the preceding numbers of the "Series," or its equivalent in other books. In this therefore, he is to expect, that higher claims will be made upon his powers of thought; and larger contributions be levied upon what he may, (or ought to) have learned from other sources.

All he knows, and, not unfrequently, more than he knows, will be put in requisition by the questions appended to the lessons here presented. It is deliberately intended to lead the mind of the pupil, as often as practicable, beyond the pages of the book in his hands. Let him not think this unfair. Nor will he, for a moment, entertain such an opinion, if his mind is sufficiently active and vigorous to take delight in new efforts, and fresh acquisitions.

We often seem to make discoveries; and certainly do make advances in knowledge, by being somewhat importunately interrogated upon topics, with which our previous acquaintance was neither accurate nor extensive. It rouses the mind to successful effort, and often strikes out new and brilliant views of a familiar subject. And who, that has made one acquisition of this kind, does not desire frequently to repeat the experiment?

It may even happen, that some of the questions cannot at once be intelligently answered by the instructor. And what then? Is a teacher never to admit that there are some things which he does not know? Does not sound instruction require that the habit of setting bounds to our speculations, and of confessing that there are bounds to our acquisitions, should be early, and strongly formed? The teacher who never dares to say "I do not know" in reply to the questions of his pupil, must be conscious of extreme ignorance. "He must be poor indeed, who would be bankrupted by the loss of a farthing." Narrow indeed must be the views of that pupil who should suppose that "all knowledge" was possessed by his teacher, however much that teacher might seem to know.

Still there is nothing to be met with, in the following pages, but what an intelligent teacher of a "common school" might be expected to know, or might, at least, easily acquire. Let him not be ashamed to learn. It is no disgrace to be ignorant; but, to be content to remain so, is a disgrace.

Let the teacher have recourse to those sources of information, from which it may most readily be obtained; and his credit will not suffer by the fact being known. No one is fit to teach, who is too proud, too old, too indolent, or too wise to learn. Nothing is so well taught as that which the teacher has most recently acquired. The business of instruction never goes more pleasantly, nor more profitably on, than when teacher and pupil advance together; and it admits of debate, whether it is more desirable, that, in order to this, the teacher should return for his pupil; or start only so far in advance of him, as to be his conductor. He is not the best pilot, who has most frequently traveled the road; but he who can most safely, pleasantly, and expeditiously conduct you to your journey's end. This book is intended to aid and stimulate the teacher, as well as the pupil.

The author ventures to predict, that if any of the lessons shall be found unintelligible to the younger class of readers, it will not be those of the highest character for thought and diction; and especially in the selections from poetry. He has long been of opinion that a mischievous error pervades the public mind, on the subject of the juvenile understanding. Nothing is so difficult to be understood as "nonsense." Nothing is so clear and easy to be comprehended as the simplicity of wisdom.

It may perhaps be expected, that the author should here add something in explanation of the principle, or in defense of the plan which he has adopted, and pursued in the series of books, of which this professes to be the last. But, as in every instance of intelligent criticism which has met his eye, both plan and principle have been approved and commended, he infers that both have been understood, and that neither requires to be explained or defended here.

Much, has at times been said and written against the use of cuts, or Pictures as employed in books for children, such as the First and Second Eclectic Readers. But the author cannot bring himself to believe, that those who employ this declamation, can mean any thing more than that pictures are liable to abuse, in the business of instruction. And what is there that is not liable to abuse?

There is no person but the veriest smatterer in the business of education, who does not see at once, that visible delineations are indispensable in every grade of education, from the primer to the Principia. What are maps in Geography, or cuts in Natural History, or diagrams in Geometry, but visible delineations on precisely the same principle with pictures and cuts in elementary books for children?

On the subject of Questions appended to the lessons, there is, and can be, but one opinion amongst the intelligent in community. Where answers are furnished to every question the memory alone will be cultivated. But no teacher can give instruction without asking questions.

The compiler will rejoice to know, that those who use his books, ask more intelligent questions, and in much greater numbers, than are to be found in the pages before them. This is the very design of that part of his labors. His wish is, to incite the teacher to the interrogative method orally, and then he cares not whether he asks a single question that is printed in the book. Still, he believes that some teachers may be found, who are not too wise to be assisted in this manner; and who may not only need, but feel that they need such suggestions as are furnished in the questions.

The Errors marked in pronunciation are such as more frequently occur in reading and in common conversation; and are sometimes heard even in literary society, and in addresses to the public from literary men. A variety of mispronunciation is sometimes given on the same word; because such variety prevails in the community. But what has been done in this, as in every thing else, must be taken as an incipient attempt at correcting the errors, and supplying the defects that exist, and prevail, to the detriment not only of elegance, but of accuracy in our oral and literary intercourse with our fellow-citizens.

In conclusion, the author begs leave to state, that the whole series of "Eclectic Readers" is his own. In the preparation of the rules, etc., for the present volume he has had the assistance of a very distinguished Teacher, whose judgment and zeal in promoting the cause of education have often been commended by the American people. In the arrangement of the series generally, he is indebted to many of his friends for valuable suggestions, and he takes this opportunity of tendering them his thanks for the lively interest they have manifested for the success of his undertaking.

From no source has the author drawn more copiously, in his selections, than from the sacred Scriptures. For this, he certainly apprehends no censure. In a Christian country, that man is to be pitied, who at this day, can honestly object to imbuing the minds of youth with the language and spirit of the Word of God.

The student of the Bible will, it is believed; be pleased to find a specimen of the elegant labors of Bishop Jebb, and some specimens of sacred poetry as arranged by Dr. Coit, in which the exact words of our authorized translation are preserved, while the poetic order of the original is happily restored.

With these somewhat extended prefatory remarks, the volume is respectfully submitted to the judgment of the public.

SECOND EDITION.—This second edition is considerably enlarged; and, it is hoped, somewhat improved. The volume is now stereotyped, and will not be subjected to alterations in subsequent editions.

SUGGESTIONS TO TEACHERS.

To read with a loud and full tone, to pronounce every syllable properly and distinctly, and to mind the pauses ;—are the three most difficult points to be gained in making good readers. If these three things are attained, the various intonations that express sentiment will generally follow, as soon as pupils have knowledge enough to understand the sense, and will give their attention to it.

There are no general rules for modulating the tones and manner, with reference to the sense, that can be of much service in a reading book for schools. This work contains all the other rules that can be of much practical use to teachers.

If teachers will classify with reference to particular defects in reading, it will much abridge the labor of teaching. Let all who read in a low and feeble voice be put in one class and practised with reference to this fault till it is conquered.

Let all who clip their words or pronounce indistinctly be put in another class, and practise on those rules in the book intended to correct this fault.

Let all who read too fast, and disregard the stops, be put in a class and especial attention be paid to this fault.

The great maxim of good teaching in reading is, to take one thing at a time, and to persevere in repetition, till the object aimed at is attained.

It is with reference to this, that the most important rules are repeated in successive lessons.

If the pupils are required to criticise each other's reading—to point out mispronunciation or the omissions of syllables, it sustains the interest of the exercise, and makes all more careful when called to read themselves.

The plan of having the pupils go up toward the head of the class as they correct faults, thus stimulating attention in the listeners and care in the reader, will sometimes be found useful.

But while one thing should be prominently attended to at a time many things may be joined collaterally, if proper pains be taken.

Let a class be called to read. The teacher requires the pupils to pay particular attention to emphasis. But he may, at the same time, direct them to stand at different distances while they read lessons; and thus secure a proper attention to force or loudness of utterance.

Let the teacher sometimes place his class as far from his desk as the room will permit, and require the lesson to be read in a suppressed tone, but so distinctly as to be audible throughout the room; and in this way he will most effectually secure distinct articulation. Those readers who have feeble voices are generally most remarkable for their distinctness of utterance; while those speakers and readers who have strong voices, as a general thing, articulate badly.

But this book is designed for other purposes than merely to teach the pupil to read. The selections have been made with a constant reference to the improvement of the mind as well as to the cultivation of the voice. Many of the lessons require thought, in order to be appreciated, and before they can be comprehended. Some of these require an extensive range of reading and deep reflection, to enable the reader fully to understand the allusions, to enter into the spirit, and to realize the excellence of the extracts.

Let the teacher then study the lessons as well as the pupils. Let him require, that the substance of what has been read be continuously narrated by the pupil without recurrence to the book. Let him direct that this be written down without the aid of a dictionary or grammar, and with no other appliances at hand than pen, ink, and paper. Let each pupil be so situated that he can derive no assistance from his fellow pupil; and then let the narratives, both oral and written, be the subject of severe but candid criticism by the teacher and the other pupils, as to the style, pronunciation, grammar and penmanship.

Let the teacher sometimes read aloud a lesson to his class, having previously removed every means of taking notes while he reads—and then let him require each pupil within a given, but sufficient time, to render in writing and from recollection, an abstract of what he has read.

This exercise improves the attention, practises the pen, gives fluency of expression, and a readiness of employing the ideas gained in reading, as capital of our own; and will be found highly interesting to the pupils and highly improving in a greater variety of ways than many other highly approved methods of recitation.

ECLECTIC FOURTH READER.

LESSON I.

RULE.—Be careful to pronounce every syllable distinctly, and not to join the words together. Nothing is more important to good reading than attention to this rule, and yet most young readers violate it.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE. To be read over several times by all the pupils.

In the following exercises difficult sounds have been introduced, which are commonly spoken indistinctly or entirely omitted. Let every pupil, before commencing the reading lesson, read them over several times slowly and distinctly. The difficult sounds are put in Italics.

He was incapable of it. (Here take care not to join ble and of.)

He was amiable, respectable, formidable, unbearable, intolerable, unmanageable, terrible. (Here the sound ble must be fully sounded.)

He was branded as a traitor.

Thou prob'ly my wound.

He was stretched on the floor.

But Ruth clave unto her.

The above rule is so important, that the first twelve lessons will all be under it.

Remarkable Preservation.—PROF. WILSON.

1. You have often asked me to describe to you on paper an event in my life, which at the distance of thirty years, I cannot look back to without horror. No words can give an adequate image of the miseries I suffered during that fearful night; but I shall try to give you something like a faint shadow of them, that from it your soul may conceive what I must have suffered.

2. I was, you know, on my voyage back to my native country, after an absence of five years spent in unintermitting toil in a foreign land, to which I had been driven by a singular fatality. Our voyage had been most cheerful and prosperous, and, on Christmas day, we were within fifty leagues of port. Passengers and crew were all in the highest spirits, and the ship was alive with mirth and jollity.

3. The ship was sailing at the rate of seven knots an hour. A strong snow-storm blew, but steadily and without danger; and the ship kept boldly on her course, close reefed, and mistress of the storm. While leaning over the gunwale, admiring the water rushing by like a foaming cataract, by some unaccountable accident, I lost my balance, and in an instant fell overboard into the sea.

4. I remember a convulsive shuddering all over my body, and a hurried leaping of my heart, as I felt myself about to lose hold of the vessel, and afterwards a sensation of the most icy chillness, from immersion in the waves, but nothing resembling a fall or precipitation. When below the water, I think that a momentary belief rushed across my mind, that the ship had suddenly sunk, and that I was but one of a perishing crew. I imagined that I felt a hand with long fingers clutching at my legs, and made violent efforts to escape, dragging after me as I thought, the body of some drowning wretch.

5. On rising to the surface, I recollected in a moment what had befallen me, and uttered a cry of horror, which is in my ears to this day, and often makes me shudder, as if it were the mad shriek of another person in extremity of perilous agony. Often have I dreamed over again that dire moment, and the cry I utter in my sleep is said to be something more horrible than a human voice. No ship was to be seen. She was gone forever.

6. The little happy world to which, a moment before, I had belonged, had been swept by, and I felt that God had flung me at once from the heart of joy, delight, and happiness, into the uttermost abyss of mortal misery and despair. Yes! I felt that the Almighty God had done this,—that there was an act, a fearful act of Providence, and miserable worm that I was, I thought that the act was cruel, and a sort of wild, indefinite, objectless rage and wrath assailed me, and took for awhile the place of that first shrieking terror. I gnashed my teeth, and cursed myself,—and, with bitter tears and yells, blasphemed the name of God.

7. It is true, my friend, that I did so. God forgave that wickedness. The Being, whom I then cursed, was, in his tender mercy, not unmindful of me,—of me, a poor, blind, miserable, mistaken worm. But the waves dashed over me and struck me on the face, and howled at me; and the wind yelled, and the snow beat like drifting sand into my eyes,—and the ship, the ship was gone, and there was I left to struggle, and buffet, and gasp, and sink, and perish, alone, unseen, and unpitied by man, and, as I thought too, by the everlasting God.

8. I tried to penetrate the surrounding darkness with my glaring eyes, that felt as if leaping from their sockets; and saw, as if by miraculous power, to a great distance through the night,—but no ship,—nothing but white-capped waves, and the dismal noise of thunder.

9. I shouted, shrieked, and yelled, that I might be heard by the crew, till my voice was gone,—and that too, when I knew that there were none to hear me. At last I became utterly speechless, and, when I tried to call aloud, there was nothing but a silent gasp and convulsion,—while the waves came upon me like stunning blows, reiterated, and drove me along, like a log of wood, or a dead animal.

10. All this time I was not conscious of any act of swimming; but I soon found that I had instinctively been exerting all my power and skill, and both were requisite to keep me alive in the tumultuous wake of the ship. Something struck me harder than a wave. What it was I knew not, but I grasped it with a passionate violence; for the hope of salvation came suddenly over me, and with a sudden transition from despair, I felt that I was rescued.

11. I had the same thought as if I had been suddenly heaved on shore by a wave. The crew had thrown overboard every thing they thought could afford me the slightest chance of escape from death, and a hen-coop had drifted towards me. At once all the stories I had ever read of mariners miraculously saved at sea, rushed across my recollection. I had an object to cling to, which I knew would enable me to prolong my existence.

12. I was no longer helpless on the cold weltering world of waters; and the thought that my friends were thinking of me, and doing all they could for me, gave to me a wonderful courage. I may yet pass the night in the ship, I thought; and I looked round eagerly to hear the rush of her prow, or to see through the snow-drift the gleaming of her sails.

13. This was but a momentary gladness. The ship I knew could not be far off, but, for any good she could do me, she might as well have been in the heart of the Atlantic Ocean. Ere she could have altered her course, I must have drifted a long way to leeward, and in that dim snowy night how was such a speck to be seen? I saw a flash of lightning, and then, there was thunder. It was the ship firing a gun, to let me know, if still alive, that she was somewhere lying to.

14. But wherefore? I was separated from her by a dire necessity,—by many thousand fierce waves, that would not let my shrieks be heard. Each succeeding gun was heard fainter and fainter, till at last I cursed the sound, that, scarcely heard above the hollow rumbling of the tempestuous sea, told me, that the ship was farther and farther off, till she and her heartless crew had left me to my fate.

15. Why did they not send out all their boats to row round and round all that night through, for the sake of one whom they pretended to love so well? I blamed, blessed, and cursed them by fits, till every emotion of my soul was exhausted, and I clung in sullen despair to the wretched piece of wood, that still kept me from eternity.

16. Every thing was now seen in its absolute dreadful reality. I was a Cast-away—no hope of rescue. It was broad daylight, and the storm had ceased; but clouds lay round the horizon, and no land was to be seen. What dreadful clouds! Some black as pitch, and charged with thunder; others like cliffs of fire, and here and there all streamered over with blood. It was indeed a sullen, wrathful, and despairing sky.

17. The sun itself was a dull brazen orb, cold, dead, and beamless. I beheld three ships afar off, but all their heads were turned away from me. For whole hours they would adhere motionless to the sea, while I drifted away from them; and then a rushing wind would spring up, and carry them, one by one, into the darkness of the stormy distance. Many birds came close to me, as if to flap me with their large spreading wings, screamed round and round me, and then flew away in their strength, and beauty, and happiness.

18. I now felt myself indeed dying. A calm came over me. I prayed devoutly for forgiveness of my sins, and for all my friends on earth. A ringing was in my ears, and I remember only the hollow fluctuations of the sea with which I seemed to be blended, and a sinking down and down an unfathomable depth, which I thought was Death, and into the kingdom of the eternal Future.

19. I awoke from insensibility and oblivion with a hideous, racking pain in my head and loins, and in a place of utter darkness. I heard a voice say, "Praise the Lord." My agony was dreadful, and I cried aloud. Wan, glimmering, melancholy lights, kept moving to and fro. I heard dismal whisperings, and now and then a pale silent ghost glided by. A hideous din was over head, and around me the fierce dashing of the waves. Was I in the land of spirits?

20. But, why strive to recount the mortal pain of my recovery, the soul-humbling gratitude that took possession of my being? I was lying in the cabin of a ship, and kindly tended by a humane and skillful man. I had been picked up, apparently dead, and cold. The hand of God was there. Adieu, my dear friend. It is now the hour of rest, and I hasten to fall down on my knees before the merciful Being who took pity upon me, and who, at the intercession of our Redeemer, may, I hope, pardon all my sins.

QUESTIONS.—1. Narrate this story in your own language. 2. What were the Professor's feelings when he first fell into the water? 3. What did he imagine was clutching at his heels? 4. How did he act upon rising to the surface? 5. How did he escape a watery grave?

ERRORS.—ad-e-quit for ad-e-quate; vo-ige for voy-age; cus-sed for curs-ed.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. adequate; 2. unintermitting, passengers; 3. moonlight, gunwale (pronounced gun-nel), unaccountable; 4. shuddering, immersion, precipitation, momentary, clutching; 6. uttermost, shrieking; 7. unmindful; 8. surrounding, miraculous; 10. instinctively; 11. overboard; 13. leeward; 14. tempestuous; 16. streamered; 18. fluctuations, unfathomed.

LESSON II.

RULE.—Be careful to pronounce every syllable distinctly, and not to join the words together.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE. To be read over several times by all the pupils.

The ribs of death.

Can you cry crackers, crime, cruelty, crutches?

The orb'd moon.

It was the worst act of all acts.

It is a mixed government.

The idle spindle. Long droves of cattle.

The length and breadth, and height, and depth, of the thing.

It was highly and holily done.

The Maniac.—ANONYMOUS.

1 A gentleman who had traveled in Europe, relates that he one day visited the hospital of Berlin, where he saw a man whose exterior was very striking. His figure, tall and commanding, was bending with age, but more with sorrow; the few scattered hairs which remained on his temples were white, almost as the driven snow, and the deepest melancholy was depicted in his countenance.

2. On inquiring who he was, and what brought him there, he startled, as if from sleep, and after looking round him, began with slow and measured steps to stride the hall, repeating in a low but audible voice, "Once one is two; once one is two."

3. Now and then he would stop and remain with his arms folded on his breast, as if in contemplation, for some minutes; then again resuming his walk, he continued to repeat, "Once one is two; once one is two." His story, as our traveler understood it, was as follows.

4. Conrad Lange, collector of the revenues of the city of Berlin, had long been known as a man whom nothing could divert from the paths of honesty. Scrupulously exact in all his dealings, and assiduous in the discharge of his official duties, he had acquired the good will and esteem of all who knew him, and the confidence of the minister of finance, whose duty it is to inspect the accounts of all officers connected with the revenue.

5. On casting up his accounts at the close of a particular year, he found a deficit of ten thousand ducats. Alarmed at this discovery, he went to the minister, presented his accounts, and informed him that he did not know how it had arisen, and that he had been robbed by some person bent on his ruin.

6. The minister received his accounts, but thinking it a duty to secure a person who might probably be a defaulter, he caused him to be arrested, and put his accounts into the hands of one of his secretaries, for inspection, who returned them the day after, with the information that the deficiency arose from a miscalculation; that in multiplying, Mr. Lange had said, once one is two, instead of, once one is one.

7. The poor man was immediately released from confinement, his accounts returned, and the mistake pointed out. During his imprisonment, which lasted but two days, he had neither eaten, drank, nor taken any repose—and when he appeared, his countenance was as pale as death. On receiving his accounts, he was a long time silent; then suddenly awaking as if from a trance, he repeated, "once one is two."

8. He appeared to be entirely insensible of his situation; would neither eat nor drink, unless solicited; and took notice of nothing that passed around him. Whilst repeating his accustomed phrase, if any one corrected him by saying, "once one is one," he was recalled for a moment, and said, "ah, right, once one is one;" and then resuming his walk, he continued to repeat, "once one is two." He died shortly after the traveler left Berlin.

9. This affecting story, whether true or untrue, obviously abounds with lessons of instruction. Alas! how easily is the human mind thrown off its "balance;" especially when it is stayed on this world only—and has no experimental knowledge of the meaning of the injunction of Scripture, to cast all our cares upon Him who careth for us, and who heareth even the young ravens when they cry.

QUESTIONS.—1. You may sketch the circumstances here narrated. 2. How do you account for the unhinging of this man's mind? 3. Is it common that one idea keeps possession of a maniac's mind?

ERRORS.—hosp-tal for hos-pi-tal; as-sid-di-ous for as-sid-u-ous; de-fi-cit for def-i-cit, (pronounced def-e-cit)

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. hospital, commanding, melancholy; 2. measured; 3. contemplation, traveler; 4. assiduous, finance; 6. defaulter, secretaries, miscalculation, multiplying; 7. imprisonment; 8. solicited; 9. experimental.

LESSON III.

RULE.—Be careful to pronounce every syllable distinctly, and not to join the words together.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE. To be read over several times by all the pupils.

They reef'd the top-sails. No dangers fright him.

He quenched a flame. She laughs at him.

A frame of adamant. She begged pardon.

Thou look'st from thy throne in the clouds, and laugh'st at the storm.

The table groans beneath its burden.

All clothed in rags an infant lay.

The birds were all fledg'd in the nest.

Scene at the Sandwich Islands.—STEWART.

1. At an early hour of the morning, even before we had taken our breakfast on board ship, a single islander here or there, or a group of three or four, wrapped in their large mantles of various hues, might be seen winding their way among the groves fringing the bay on the east, or descending from the hills and ravine on the north, towards the chapel; and by degrees their numbers increased, till, in a short time, every path along the beach and over the uplands presented an almost uninterrupted procession of both sexes, and of every age, all pressing to the house of God.

2. So few canoes were round the ship yesterday, and the landing-place had been so little thronged, as our boats passed to and fro, that one might have thought the district but thinly inhabited; but now, such multitudes were seen gathering from various directions, that the exclamation, "What crowds of people! What crowds of people!" was heard from the quarter-deck to the fore-castle.

3. Even to myself it was a sight of surprise; surprise not at the magnitude of the population, but that the object, for which they were evidently assembling, should bring together so great a multitude. And as my thoughts re-echoed the words, "What crowds of people!" remembrances and affections of deep power came over me; and the silent musings of my heart were, "What a change—what a happy change!"

4. When at this very place, only four years ago, the known wishes and example of chiefs of high authority, the daily persuasion of teachers, added to motives of curiosity and novelty, could scarcely induce a hundred of the inhabitants, to give an irregular, careless, and impatient attendance on the services of the sanctuary. But now,

" Like mountain torrents pouring to the main,
From every glen a living stream came forth—
From every hill, in crowds, they hastened down,
To worship Him, who deigns, in humblest fane,
On wildest shore, to meet th' upright in heart."

5. The scene, as looked on from our ship, in the stillness of a brightly-beaming Sabbath morning, was well calculated, with its associations, to prepare the mind for strong impressions on a nearer view, when the conclusion of our own public worship should allow us to go on shore. Mr. Goodrich had apprized us, that he had found it expedient to hold both the services of the Sabbath, in the forepart of the day, that all might have the benefit of two sermons, and still reach their abodes before nightfall. For,

" Numbers dwelt remote,
And first must traverse many a weary mile,
To reach the altar of the God they love."

6. And it was arranged, that, on this occasion, the second service should be postponed till the officers should be at liberty to leave the ship. It was near 12 o'clock when we went on shore—the captain and first lieutenant, the purser, surgeon, several of the midshipmen, and myself. Though the services had commenced when we landed, large numbers were seen circling the doors without ; but, as we afterwards found, only from the impracticability of obtaining places within.

7. The house is an immense structure, capable of containing many thousands, every part of which was filled, except a small area in front of the pulpit, where seats were reserved for us, and to which we made our way, in slow and tedious procession, from the difficulty of finding a spot to place even our footsteps, without treading on limbs of the people, seated on their feet, as closely, almost, as they could be stowed.

8. As we entered, Mr. Goodrich paused in his sermon, till we should be seated. I ascended the pulpit beside him, from which I had a full view of the congregation. The suspense of attention in the people was only momentary, notwithstanding the entire novelty to them of the laced coats, cocked hats, and other appendages of naval uniform. I can scarce describe the emotions experienced in glancing an eye over the immense number, seated so thickly on the matted floor as to seem literally one mass of heads, covering an area of more than nine thousand square feet. The sight was most striking, and soon became, not only to myself, but to some of my fellow officers, deeply affecting.

9. I have gazed on many worshipping assemblies, and of every variety of character; but it was left for one at Hido, the most obscure corner of these distant islands, to excite the liveliest emotions ever experienced, and leave the deepest impressions of the extent and unsearchable riches of the gospel, which I have ever known,—emotions and impressions derived simply from an ocular demonstration of the power of the Word of God on untutored man, which is without a parallel in existing events, if not in the record of history.

10. It seemed, even while I gazed, that the majesty of that Power might be seen rising and erecting to itself a throne, permanent as glorious, in the hearts of these but late utterly benighted and deeply-polluted people. And when I compared them, as they had once been known to me, and as they now appeared, the change seemed the effect of a mandate scarcely less mighty in its power, or speedy in its result, than that exhibited when it was said, "Let there be light, and there was light!"

11. The depth of the impression arose from the irresistible conviction that the SPIRIT OF GOD was there : it could have been nothing else. With the exception of the inferior chiefs, having charge of the district, and their dependents, of two or three native members of the church, and of the mission family, scarcely one of the whole multitude was in other than the native dress.

12. In this respect, and in the attitude of sitting, the assembly was purely pagan. But the breathless silence, the eager attention, the half-suppressed sigh, the tear, the various feeling, sad, peaceful, joyous, discoverable in the faces of many—all spoke the presence of an invisible but omnipotent Power—the Power which alone can melt and renew the heart of man, even as it alone first brought it into existence.

13. It was, in a word, a heathen congregation laying hold on the hopes of eternity—a heathen congregation, fully sensible of the darkness of their original state, exulting in the first beams of truth, and in the no uncertain dawning of the Sun of Righteousness; thirsting after knowledge, even while they sweetly drank of the waters of life; and, under the reviving and inspiring influence, by every look, expressing the heart-felt truth—“Beautiful on the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth SALVATION!”

14. The simple appearance and yet Christian deportment of that obscure congregation, whom I had once known, and at no remote period, only as a set of rude, licentious, and wild pagans, did more to rivet the conviction of the divine origin of the Bible, and of the holy influences by which it is accompanied to the hearts of men, than all the arguments, and apologies, and defences of Christianity I ever read.

QUESTIONS.—1. Where are the Sandwich Islands? 2. What is the degree of population? 3. What change has taken place in the moral character of the population, and in how long a time? 4. To what is this change to be attributed? 5. Give some description of the house of worship, audience, etc., etc.

ERRORS.—sur-prize for sur-prise; pop-er-la-tion for pop-u-la-tion; wush-ib for wor-ship; his-try for his-to-ry; spcr-it for spir-it.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. uninterrupted, procession; 2. multitudes; 3. remembrances, re-echoed, assembling; 4. hundred, irregular, inhabitants; 5. associations, apprized, nightfall; 6. postponed, midshipmen, impracticability; 8. congregation, appendages; 9. worshipping, unsearchable, demonstration, parallel; 10. benighted.

LESSON IV.

RULE.—Be careful to pronounce every syllable distinctly, and not to join the words together.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE. To be read over several times by all the pupils.

My Uncle Toby was racked with pain.

Racked with whirlwinds.

Victory will weaken the enemy.

Think'st thou so meanly of me?

On the River Elbe. We saw the Elk.

And he cried, hold, hold, hold.

The wolf who's howl's his watch.

Fall'n, fall'n, fall'n, fall'n, fall'n, from his high estate.

There was no help for it.

He watch'd and wept, he felt and pray'd for all.

It was a willfully false account.

Contrasted Soliloquies.—JANE TAYLOR.

1. "Alas!" exclaimed a silver-headed sage, "how narrow is the utmost extent of human science!—how circumscribed the sphere of intellectual exertion! I have spent my life in acquiring knowledge; but how little do I know! The farther I attempt to penetrate the secrets of nature, the more I am bewildered and benighted. Beyond a certain limit, all is but confusion or conjecture; so that the advantage of the learned over the ignorant, consists greatly in having ascertained how little is to be known.

2. "It is true that I can measure the sun, and compute the distances of the planets; I can calculate their periodical movements, and even ascertain the laws by which they perform their sublime revolutions; but with regard to their construction, and the beings which inhabit them, what do I know more than the clown?

3. "Delighting to examine the economy of nature in our own world, I have analyzed the elements; and have given names to their component parts. And yet, should I not be as much at a loss to explain the burning of fire, or to account for the liquid quality of water, as the vulgar, who use and enjoy them without thought or examination?

4. "I remark that all bodies, unsupported, fall to the ground; and I am taught to account for this by the law of gravitation. But what have I gained here more than a term? Does it convey to my mind any idea of the nature of that mysterious and invisible chain which draws all things to a common center? I observe the effect, I give a name to the cause; but can I explain or comprehend it?

5. "Pursuing the track of the naturalist, I have learned to distinguish the animal, vegetable and mineral kingdoms ; and to divide these into their distinct tribes and families ; but can I tell, after all this toil, whence a single blade of grass derives its vitality ? Could the most minute researches enable me to discover the exquisite pencil, that paints and fringes the flower of the field ? Have I ever detected the secret, that gives their brilliant dye to the ruby and the emerald, or the art that enamels the delicate shell ?

6. " I observe the sagacity of animals ; I call it instinct, and speculate upon its various degrees of approximation to the reason of man. But, after all, I know as little of the cogitations of the brute, as he does of mine. When I see a flight of birds overhead, performing their evolutions, or steering their course to some distant settlement, their signals and cries are as unintelligible to me, as are the learned languages to the unlettered rustic ; I understand as little of their policy and laws, as they do of Blackstone's Commentaries.

7. " But leaving the material creation, my thoughts have often ascended to loftier subjects, and indulged in metaphysical speculation. And here, while I easily perceive in myself the two distinct qualities of matter and mind, I am baffled in every attempt to comprehend their mutual dependence and mysterious connexion. When my hand moves in obedience to my will, have I the most distant conception of the manner in which the volition is either communicated or understood ? Thus, in the exercise of one of the most simple and ordinary actions, I am perplexed and confounded, if I attempt to account for it.

8. " Again, how many years of my life were devoted to the acquisition of those languages, by the means of which I might explore the records of remote ages, and become familiar with the learning and literature of other times ! And what have I gathered from these, but the mortifying fact, that 'man has ever been struggling with his own impotence, and vainly endeavoring to overleap the bounds which limit his anxious inquiries ?

9. " Alas ! then, what have I gained by my laborious researches, but an humbling conviction of my weakness and ignorance ? How little has man, at his best estate, of which to boast ! What folly in him to glory in his contracted power, or to value himself upon his imperfect acquisitions !"

10. " Well," exclaimed a young lady, just returned from school, " my education is at last finished !—indeed, it would be strange, if, after five years' hard application, any thing were left incomplete. Happily, that is all over now; and I have nothing to do, but to exercise my various accomplishments.

11. "Let me see!—As to French, I am complete mistress of that, and speak it, if possible, with more fluency than English. Italian I can read with ease, and pronounce very well; as well, at least, as any of my friends; and that is all one need wish for in Italian. Music I have learned till I am perfectly sick of it. But, now that we have a grand piano, it will be delightful to play when we have company; I must still continue to practice a little;—the only thing, I think, that I need now to improve myself in. And then there are my Italian songs! which every body allows I sing with taste; and as it is what so few people can pretend to, I am particularly glad that I can.

12. "My drawings are universally admired,—especially the shells and flowers, which are beautiful, certainly: besides this, I have a decided taste in all kinds of fancy ornaments. And then my dancing and waltzing,—in which our master himself owned that he could take me no farther—just the figure for it, certainly; it would be unpardonable if I did not excel.

13. "As to common things, geography and history, and poetry, and philosophy,—thank my stars, I have got through them all! so that I may consider myself not only perfectly accomplished, but also thoroughly well informed. Well, to be sure, how much I have fagged through!—the only wonder is, that one head can contain it all!"

QUESTIONS.—1. What is the subject of this lesson? 2. What is meant by "Soliloquies?" 3. What Soliloquies are here contrasted? 4. What is the substance of the old man's soliloquy? 5. What is the substance of the young lady's? 6. Which reasons most correctly, the old man or the young lady? 7. What feeling is manifested by the old man in view of his attainments? 8. What by the young lady? 9. If we are truly wise, will we be vain?

ERRORS.—Nar-rer and nar-ry for nar-row; be-yund for be-yond; cal-kil-ate for cal-cu-late; in-joy for en-joy; Black-stun for Black-stone; ed-e-ca-tion for ed-u-ca-tion; flu'n-cy for flu-en-cy; jog-ra-phy for ge-og-ra-phy; his-try for his-to-ry; kin for can.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. Circumscribed, intellectual, penetrate, conjecture, ascertained; 2. compute, ascertain, revolutions, construction; 3. economy, analyzed, component; 4. gravitation; 5. exquisite, animal, vegetable, mineral, vitality, enamels; 6. sagacity, instinct, approximation, cogitation, unintelligible; 7. metaphysical, volition; 10. incomplete; 11. fluency; 12. waltzing.

LESSON V.

RULE.—Be careful to pronounce every syllable distinctly, and not to join the words together.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE. To be read over several times by all the pupils.

It was a species of calx, which he showed me.

The word filch is of doubtful derivation.

If thou fall'st, thou fall'st a blessed martyr.

Health is indispensable to the soldier.

Those who lie entombed in the cemetery.

The attempt, and not the deed confounds us.

But truth, and liberty and virtue would fall with him.

The song began from Jove.

Do you mean plain or playing?

On Letter Writing.—BLACKWOOD.

1. Epistolary as well as personal intercourse is, according to the mode in which it is carried on, one of the pleasantest or most irksome things in the world. It is delightful to drop in on a friend without the solemn prelude of invitation and acceptance—to join a social circle, where we may suffer our minds and hearts to relax and expand in the happy consciousness of perfect security from invidious remark and carping criticism; where we may give the reins to the sportive-ness of innocent fancy, or the enthusiasm of warm-hearted feeling; where we may talk sense or nonsense, (I pity people who cannot talk nonsense,) without fear of being looked into icicles by the coldness of unimaginative people—living pieces of clock-work, who dare not themselves utter a word, or lift up a little finger, without first weighing the important point, in the hair balance of propriety and good breeding.

2. It is equally delightful to let the pen talk freely, and unpremeditatedly, and to one by whom we are sure of being understood; but a formal letter, like a ceremonious morning visit, is tedious alike to the writer and receiver—for the most part spun out with unmeaning phrases, trite observations, complimentary flourishes, and protestations of respect and attachment, so far not deceitful, as they never deceive any body. Oh the misery of having to compose a set, proper, well worded, correctly pointed, polite, elegant epistle!—one that must have a beginning, a middle, and an end, as methodically arranged and portioned out as the several parts of a sermon under three heads, or the three gradations of shade in a school-girl's first landscape!

3. For my part, I would rather be set to beat hemp, or weed in a turnip-field, than to write such a letter exactly every month, or every fortnight, at the precise point of time from the date of our correspondent's last letter, that he or she wrote after the reception of ours—as if one's thoughts bubbled up to the well-head, at regular periods, a pint at a time, to be bottled off for immediate use. Thought! what has thought to do in such a correspondence? It murders thought, quenches fancy, wastes time, spoils paper, wears out innocent goose-quills—"I'd rather be a kitten, and cry mew! than one of those same" prosing letter-mongers.

4. Surely in this age of invention something may be struck out to obviate the necessity (if such necessity exists) of so tasking—degrading the human intellect. Why should not a sort of mute barrel-organ be constructed on the plan of those that play sets of tunes and country dances, to indite a catalogue of polite epistles calculated for all the ceremonious observances of good breeding? Oh the unspeakable relief (could such a machine be invented) of having only to grind an answer to one of one's "dear five hundred friends!"

5. Or, suppose there were to be an epistolary steam-engine—Ay, that's the thing—Steam does every thing now-a-days. Dear Mr. Brunel, set about it, I beseech you, and achieve the most glorious of your undertakings. The block-machine at Portsmouth would be nothing to it—That spares manual labor—this would relieve mental drudgery, and thousands yet unborn - - - But hold! I am not so sure the female sex in general may quite enter into my views of the subject.

6. Those who pique themselves on the elegant style of their billets, or those fair scribblerinas just emancipated from boarding-school restraints, or the dragonism of their governess, just beginning to taste the refined enjoyments of sentimental, confidential, soul-breathing correspondence with some Angelina, Seraphina, or Laura Matilda; to indite beautiful little notes, with long-tailed letters, upon vellum paper, with pink margins sealed with sweet mottoes, and dainty devices, the whole deliciously perfumed with musk and attar of roses—young ladies who collect, "copies of verses," and charades—keep albums—copy patterns—make bread seals—work little dogs upon footstools, and paint flowers without shadow—Oh! no—the epistolary steam-engine will never come into vogue with those dear creatures—They must enjoy the "feast of reason, and the flow of soul," and they must write—Yes! and how they do write!

7. But for another genus of female scribes—Unhappy innocents! who groan in spirit at the dire necessity of having to hammer out one of those aforesaid terrible epistles—who having in due form dated the gilt-edged sheet that lies outspread before them in appalling whiteness—having also felicitously achieved the graceful exordium, "My dear Mrs. P." or "My dear Lady V." or "My dear—any thing else," feel that they are in for it, and must say something—Oh, that something that must come of nothing! those bricks that must be made without straw! those pages that must be filled with words! Yea, with words that must be sewed into sentences! Yea, with sentences that must seem to mean something; the whole to be tacked together, all neatly fitted and dove-tailed, so as to form one smooth, polished surface!

8. What were the labors of Hercules to such a task! The very thought of it puts me into a mental perspiration; and, from my inmost soul, I compassionate the unfortunates now (at this very moment, perhaps,) screwed up perpendicular in the seat of torture, having in the right hand a fresh-nibbed patent pen, dipped ever and anon into the ink-bottle, as if to hook up ideas, and under the outspread palm of the left hand a fair sheet of best Bath post, (ready to receive thoughts yet unhatched,) on which their eyes are riveted with a stare of disconsolate perplexity infinitely touching to a feeling mind.

9. To such unhappy persons, in whose miseries I deeply sympathize - - Have I not groaned under similar horrors, from the hour when I was first shut up (under lock and key, I believe,) to indite a dutiful epistle to an honored aunt? I remember, as if it were yesterday, the moment when she who had enjoined the task entered to inspect the performance, which, by her calculation, should have been fully completed—I remember how sheepishly I hung down my head, when she snatched from before me the paper, (on which I had made no further progress than "My dear ant,") angrily exclaiming, "What, child! have you been shut up here three hours to call your aunt a pismire?" From that hour of humiliation I have too often groaned under the endurance of similar penance, and I have learnt from my own sufferings to compassionate those of my dear sisters in affliction. To such unhappy persons, then, I would fain offer a few hints, (the fruit of long experience,) which, if they have not already been suggested by their own observation, may prove serviceable in the hour of emergency.

10. Let them - - - or suppose I address myself to one particular sufferer—there is something more confidential in that manner of communicating one's ideas—As Moore says, "Heart speaks to heart"—I say, then, take always special care to write by candlelight, for not only is the apparently unimportant operation of snuffing the candle in itself a momentary relief to the depressing consciousness of mental vacuum, but not unfrequently that trifling act, or the brightening flame of the taper, elicits, as it were, from the dull embers of fancy, a sympathetic spark of fortunate conception—When such a one occurs, seize it quickly and dexterously, but, at the same time, with such cautious prudence, as not to huddle up and contract in one short, paltry sentence, that which, if ingeniously handled, may be wire-drawn, so as to undulate gracefully and smoothly over a whole page.

11. For the more ready practice of this invaluable art of dilating, it will be expedient to stock your memory with a large assortment of those precious words of many syllables, that fill whole lines at once; "incomprehensibly, amazingly, decidedly, solicitously, inconceivably, incontrovertibly." An opportunity of using these, is, to a distressed spinner, as delightful as a copy all m's and n's to a child. "Command you may, your mind from play." They run on with such delicious smoothness! * * * *

QUESTIONS.—Upon what does the pleasure of epistolary and social intercourse depend? What is meant by talking nonsense? What is the intention of the writer of this piece? From whom does the author quote in the sentence, "I'd rather be a kitten," &c.?

ERRORS.—pre-lude for prel-ude; 'x*ac-ly* for ex-act-ly: sued for sewed (pronounced sode); Herc-les for Her-cu-les; per-tic-lar for partic-u-lar.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. epistolary, invidious, enthusiasm, nonsense, unimaginative; 3. well-head, correspondent, letter-monger; 4. invention, 5. epistolary, manual; 6. scribblerinas, emancipated; 7. genus; 8. mental, compassionate, disconsolate; 9. humiliation; 10. elicits, communicating, dilate.

LESSON VI.

RULE.—Be careful to pronounce every syllable distinctly, and not to join the words together.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE. To be read over several times by all the pupils.

Ginevra.—ROGERS.

1. If ever you should come to Modena,
 Stop at a palace near the Reggio-gate,
 Dwelt in of old by one of the Donati.
 Its noble gardens, terrace above terrace,
 And rich in fountains, statues, cypresses,
 Will long detain you—but, before you go,
 Enter the house—forget it not, I pray you—
 And look awhile upon a picture there.
2. 'Tis of a lady in her earliest youth,
 The last of that illustrious family;
 Done by Zampieri—but by whom I care not.
 He, who observes it—ere he passes on,
 Gazes his fill, and comes and comes again,
 That he may call it up when far away.
3. She sits, inclining forward as to speak,
 Her lips half open, and her finger up,
 As though she said, "Beware!" her vest of gold
 Brodered with flowers and clasped from head to foot
 An emerald stone in every golden clasp;
 And on her brow, fairer than alabaster,
 A coronet of pearls.
4. But then her face,
 So lovely, yet so arch, so full of mirth,

The overflowings of an innocent heart—
It haunts me still, though many a year has fled,
Like some wild melody!

5. Alone it hangs
Over a mouldering heir-loom ; its companion,
An oaken chest, half-eaten by the worm,
But richly carved by Antony of Trent
With scripture-stories from the life of Christ ;
A chest that came from Venice, and had held
The ducal robes of some old ancestors—
That by the way—it may be true or false—
But don't forget the picture ; and you will not,
When you have heard the tale they told me there.
6. She was an only child—her name Ginevra,
The joy, the pride of an indulgent father ;
And in her fifteenth year became a bride,
Marrying an only son, Francesco Doria,
Her playmate from her birth, and her first love.
7. Just as she looks there, in her bridal dress,
She was, all gentleness, all gayety,
Her pranks the favorite theme of every tongue.
But now the day was come, the day, the hour ;
Now, frowning, smiling for the hundredth time,
The nurse, that ancient lady, preached deco'rum ;
And, in the luster of her youth, she gave
Her hand, with her heart in it, to Francesco.
8. Great was the joy ; but at the nuptial feast,
When all sate down, the bride herself was wanting.
Nor was she to be found ! Her father cried,
“ ‘Tis but to make a trial of our love ! ”
And filled his glass to all ; but his hand shook,
And soon from guest to guest the panic spread.
9. 'Twas but that instant she had left Francesco,
Laughing and looking back and flying still,
Her ivory tooth imprinted on his finger.
But now, alas ! she was not to be found ;
Nor from that hour could any thing be guessed,
But that she was not !

10. Weary of his life,
 Francesco flew to Venice, and embarking,
 Flung it away in battle with the Turk.
 Donati lived—and long might you have seen
 An old man wandering as in quest of something, .
 Something he could not find—he knew not what.
 When he was gone, the house remained awhile
 Silent and tenantless—then went to strangers.
11. Full fifty years were past, and all forgotten,
 When on an idle day, a day of search
 Mid the old lumber in the gallery,
 That mouldering chest was noticed; and 'twas said
 By one as young, as thoughtless as Ginevra,
 "Why not remove it from its lurking-place?"
 'Twas done as soon as said; but on the way
 It burst, it fell; and lo! a skeleton
 With here and there a pearl, an emerald-stone,
 A golden clasp, clasping a shred of gold.
 All else had perished—save a wedding-ring,
 And a small seal, her mother's legacy,
 Engraven with a name, the name of both—
 "Ginevra."
12. —There then had she found a grave!
 Within that chest had she concealed herself,
 Fluttering with joy, the happiest of the happy;
 When a spring-lock, that lay in ambush there,
 Fastened her down for ever!

QUESTIONS.—1. Where is Modena? 2. Who was the painter of the picture? 3. Describe the attitude and dress. 4. What lies beneath the picture? 5. Relate the story which gives interest to the chest and picture.

ERRORS.—Reg-gi-o for Red-ge-o; hont for haunt (pronounced hant); an-cient for ān-cient; sred for shred.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. statues, terrace, cypresses; 2. illustrious; 3. brodered, emerald; 4. overflowing; 5. mouldering, ancestors, heirloom; 6. indulgent, ancient; 8. nuptial; 9. imprinted; 10. embarking; 11. engraven, emerald; 12. ambush.

The Whale Ship.—PROV. LIT. JOURNAL.

1. They who go down to the sea in ships pursue a perilous vocation, and well deserve the prayers which are offered for them in the churches. It is a hard life—full of danger, and of strange attraction. The seaman rarely abandons the glorious sea. It requires, however, a pretty firm spirit, both to brave the ordinary dangers of the deep, and to carry on war with its mightiest tenants. And yet it is a service readily entered upon, and zealously followed; though indisputably the most laborious and most terrific of all human pursuits. Well might Burke speak glowingly of that hardy spirit of adventure, which had pursued this gigantic game, from the constellations of the north to the frozen serpent of the south.

2. The most common accident to which whalemén are exposed, is that of being 'stove,' as they express it, by the huge animal, before they can back out from their dangerous proximity. A slight tap of his tail is quite sufficient to shiver a common whale-boat to atoms. If this danger be escaped, the whale, with the harpoon in his hide, sinks beneath the sounding of the deep-sea lead. Not long will he stay at the bottom. He rises for air, and this is a signal for the renewal of the battle. The boat is drawn up, and the lance is buried in his giant body. Not safe is the game till it is fairly bagged. Often, in the moment of victory, the vanquished leviathan settles quietly down in the deep sea; and no tackle can draw him up. The curses of the exhausted seamen are 'not loud, but deep.'

3. On the twenty-eight of May, 1817, the Royal Bounty, an English ship, fell in with a great number of whales. There was neither ice nor land in sight. The boats were manned and sent in pursuit. After a chase of five hours, a harpooner, who had rowed out of sight of the ship, struck one of the whales. This was about four o'clock in the morning. The captain directed the course of the ship to the place where he had last seen the boats, and at about eight o'clock got sight of the boat which displayed the signal for being fast. Soon after, another boat approached the first, and struck a second harpoon.

4. By mid-day, two more harpoons were struck; but such was the astonishing vigor of the whale, that although it constantly dragged through the water from four to six boats, together with sixteen hundred fathoms of line, yet it pursued its flight nearly as fast as a boat could row. Whenever a boat passed beyond its tail, it would dive. All endeavors to lance it were therefore in vain. The crews of the loose boats then moored themselves to the fast boats. At eight o'clock in the evening, a line was taken to the ship, with a view of retarding its flight, and topsails were lowered; but the harpoon 'drew.' In three hours, another line was taken on board, which immediately snapped.

5. At four in the afternoon of the next day, thirty-six hours after the whale was struck, two of the fast lines were taken on board the ship. The wind blowing a moderately brisk breeze, the top-gallant sails were taken in, the courses hauled up, and the topsails clewed down:—and in this situation she was towed directly to windward during an hour and a half, with the velocity of from one and a half to two knots. And then, though the whale must have been greatly exhausted, it beat the water with its fins and tail so tremendously, that the sea around was in a continual foam; and the most hardy seamen scarcely dared to approach it. At length, at about eight o'clock, after forty hours of incessant exertion, this formidable and astonishingly vigorous animal was killed.

6. But the most strange and dreadful calamity, that ever befell the wanderers of the sea, in any age, was that which happened in 1820, to the ship Essex, of Nantucket. Some of those who survived the terrible catastrophe are yet alive, and bear their united testimony to the truth of the statements which one of them has published. It is a story which no man, for any conceivable purpose, would be likely to invent. The captain of the Essex is yet living upon his native island; and it is a fact pregnant with meaning, that, so vivid, to this day, is his recollection of the horrors which he witnessed, that he is never heard to mention the subject, and nothing can induce him to speak of it. He has abandoned the sea forever. The story bears the marks of truth upon it. It may be briefly told.

7. The Essex, a sound and substantial ship, sailed for the Pacific Ocean, on a whaling voyage, from Nantucket, on the 12th of August, 1820. On the 20th of November, a shoal of whales was discovered. Three boats were manned and sent in pursuit. The mate's boat was struck by a whale, and he was obliged to return to the ship to repair the damage. While thus engaged, a sperm whale, eighty-five feet long, broke water about twenty rods from the ship, on her weather bow. He was going at the rate of three knots an hour, and the ship at the same rate, when he struck the bows of the vessel just forward of the chains.

8. The shock produced by the collision of two such masses of matter in motion, may well be imagined. The ship shook like a leaf. The whale 'dove,' passed under the vessel—grazed her keel—and appeared at the ship's length distant, lashing the sea with his fins and tail, as if suffering the most horrible agony.—He was evidently hurt by the collision, and rendered frantic with rage. In a few minutes he seemed to recover himself, and started, with great speed, directly across the bows of the vessel, to windward. Meantime the hands on board discovered the vessel to be gradually settling down by the bows; and the pumps were to be rigged. While engaged in fixing the pumps, one of the men exclaimed, 'My God, here he comes upon us again!'

9. The whale had turned, at the distance of one hundred rods from the ship, and was making for her with double his former speed. His pathway was white with foam. He struck her bow, and the blow shook every timber in the ship. Her bows were stove in. The whale dove under the vessel and disappeared. The vessel immediately filled; and the crew took to the boat that had returned. All this was transacted in the space of a few minutes. The other boats rowed up, and when they came together—when a sense of their loneliness and helplessness came over them—no man had the power of utterance. They were in the midst of the 'illimitable sea'—far, far from land—in open whale-boats; relying only on God for succor, in this hour of their utmost need.

10. They gathered what they could from the wreck,—the ship went down; and, on the 22d of November, they put away for the coast of South America—distant two thousand miles! How their hearts must have died within them, as they looked at the prospect before and around them! After incredible hardships and sufferings, on the 20th of Deember, they reached a low island. It was a mere sand-bank, almost barren, which supplied them with nothing but water. On this island, desolate as it was, three of the men chose to remain, rather than to commit themselves again to the uncertain chances of the sea.

11. On the 27th of December, the three boats, with the remainder of the men, started in company from the island, for Juan Fernandez, a distance of two thousand five hundred miles! On the 12th of January, the boats parted company in a gale. Then commenced a scene of suffering, which cannot be contemplated without horror. The men died one after another, and the survivors lived upon their flesh. In the captain's boat, on the first of February, three only were living; they cast lots to see which of them should die. It fell upon the youngest, a nephew of the captain. He seated himself in the bow of the boat, with calmness and fortitude—was shot and eaten!

12. The mate's boat was taken up by the Indian, of London, on the 19th of February, ninety-three days from the time of the catastrophe, with three living men of that boat's crew. The captain's boat was taken up on the 23d of February, by the Dauphin, of Nantucket. The other boat was never heard from. The three men who were left on the island were saved by a ship which was sent for their deliverance. No wonder that the heart of that brave man recoils and shudders, when this terrific scene is forced upon his recollection.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is the character of the seaman's profession? Particularly of the whalers? 2. What are the most common accidents to which whalers are liable? 3. How do they often lose their game when vanquished? 4. How long was the whale first mentioned (3—5) in being vanquished? 5. At what rate was he able to draw the ship through the water? 6. Can you give a sketch of what occurred to the ship Essex in 1820? 7. Narrate the adventures and fate of the crew, after the destruction of their vessel.

ERRORS.—ord-na-ry for or-di-na-ry; pur-ty or per-ty for pretty; vict-ry for vic-to-ry.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. zealously, indisputably, glowingly, gigantic, constellations; 2. proximity, vanquished, leviathan; 3. latitude, longitude, approached, harpoon; 4. fathoms, moored, retarding; 5. moderately, top-gallant, clewed, windward, exhausted, tremendously, incessant, formidable.

LESSON VIII.

RULE.—Be careful to pronounce every syllable distinctly, and not to join the words together.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE. To be read over several times by all the pupils.

We saw a large dead fish, floating.

And he slew him.

Every man's house is his castle.

This meteorous vapor is called "Will o' the wisp."

I thrust three thousand thistles through the thick of my thumb.

Braid broad braids, my brave babes.

We never swerved, but lost our swivel gun.

The Winged Worshipers.—SPRAGUE.

[Addressed to two swallows, that flew into Church during Divine Service.]

1. Gay, guiltless pair,
What seek ye from the fields of heaven?
Ye have no need of prayer,
Ye have no sins to be forgiven.

2. Why perch ye here,
Where mortals to their Maker bend?
Can your pure spirits fear
The God ye never could offend?

3. Ye never knew
The crimes for which we come to weep:
Penance is not for you,
Bless'd wand'ers of the upper deep.

4. To you 'tis given
To wake sweet nature's untaught lays;
Beneath the arch of heaven
To chirp away a life of praise.

5. Then spread each wing,
Far, far above, o'er lakes and lands,
And join the choirs that sing
In yon blue dome not reared with hands.

6. Or if ye stay
To note the consecrated hour,
Teach me the airy way,
And let me try your envied power.

7. Above the crowd,
On upward wings could I but fly,
I'd bathe in yon bright cloud,
And seek the stars that gem the sky.

8. 'Twere heaven indeed,
Through fields of trackless light to soar,
On nature's charms to feed,
And nature's own great God adore.

QUESTIONS.—1. On what occasion was this poem written? 2. We address letters to our friends—was this addressed to the birds in the same sense? 3. Do you discover any beautiful expressions in this lesson? 4. Point them out.

ERRORS.—par for pair; prar for pray-er; en-vide for en-vied.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. guiltless; 2. perch; 3. penance; 4. untaught; 5. choirs; 6. consecrated; 8. trackless.

LESSON IX.

RULE.—Be careful to pronounce every syllable distinctly, and not to join the words together.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE. To be read over several times by all the pupils.

The bell tinkles; the man truckles to power.

Thou chuckl'dst over thy gains too soon.

It was barb'd and bulb'd.

The bulbs are sprouting.

The pert fairies and the dapper elves.

Is this delft, or delf ware?

The costliest silks are there.

Overwhelm'd with whirlwinds and tempestuous fire.

Death at the Toilet.—DIARY OF A PHYSICIAN.

1. "What can Charlotte be doing all this while?" inquired her mother. She listened—"I have not heard her moving for the last three quarters of an hour! I will call the maid and ask." She rung the bell, and the servant appeared.

2. "Betty, Miss Jones is not gone yet, is she? Go up to her room, Betty, and see if she wants any thing, and tell her it is half past nine o'clock," said Mrs. Jones. The servant accordingly went up stairs, and knocked at the bedroom door, once, twice, thrice, but received no answer. There was a dead silence, except when the wind shook the window. Could Miss Jones have fallen asleep? Oh! impossible!

3. She knocked again, but as unsuccessfully as before. She became a little flustered; and after a moment's pause opened the door and entered. There was Miss Jones sitting at the glass. "Why ma'am!" commenced Betty in a petulant tone, walking up to her, "here have I been knocking for these five minutes, and"——Betty staggered, horror struck to the bed, and uttering a loud shriek, alarmed Mrs. Jones, who instantly tottered up stairs, almost palsied with fright. Miss Jones was dead!

4. I was there within a few minutes, for my house was not more than two streets distant. It was a stormy night in March: and the desolate aspect of things without—deserted streets—the dreary howling of the wind; and the incessant pattering of the rain—contributed to cast a gloom over my mind, when connected with the intelligence of the awful event that had summoned me out, which was deepened into horror by the spectacle I was doomed to witness.

5. On reaching the house, I found Mrs. Jones in violent hysterics, surrounded by several of her neighbors who had been called to her assistance. I repaired to the scene of death, and beheld what I never shall forget.

6. The room was occupied by a white-curtained bed. There was but one window, and before it was a table, on which stood a looking glass, hung with a little white drape-ry; and various paraphernalia of the toilet lay scattered about—pins, broaches, curling papers, ribbins, gloves, etc.

7. An arm chair was drawn to this table, and in it sat Miss Jones, stone dead. Her head rested upon her right hand, her elbow supported by the table; while her left hung down by her side, grasping a pair of curling irons. Each of her wrists was encircled by a showy gilt bracelet.

8. She was dressed in a white muslin frock, with a little bordering of blonde. Her face was turned towards the glass, which by the light of the expiring candle, reflected with frightful fidelity the clammy, fixed features, daubed with rouge and carmine—the fallen lower jaw—and the eyes directed full into the glass, with a cold stare, that was appalling.

9. On examining the countenance more narrowly, I thought I detected the traces of a smirk of conceit and self-complacency, which not even the palsy touch of death could wholly obliterate. The hair of the corpse, all smooth and glossy, was curled with elaborate precision; and the skinny sallow neck was encircled with a string of glistening pearls. The ghastly visage of death thus leering through the tinselry of fashion—the “vain show” of artificial joy—was a horrible mockery of the fooleries of life!

10. Indeed it was a most humiliating and shocking spectacle. Poor creature! struck dead in the very act of sacrificing at the shrine of female vanity!

11. On examination of the body, we found that death had been occasioned by disease of the heart. Her life might have been protracted, possibly for years, had she but taken my advice, and that of her mother.

12. I have seen many hundreds of corpses, as well in the calm composure of natural death, as mangled and distorted by violence; but never have I seen so startling a satire upon human vanity, so repulsive, unsightly, and loathsome a spectacle, as a corpse dressed for a ball!

QUESTIONS.—1. Narrate, in a few words, the story which you have been reading. 2. What was the true cause of this young lady's death? 3. Is it common for persons to die suddenly? 4. As no one knows the time of his death, how should all live? 5. What is the reason given in the Bible for obeying parents? 6. Is a ball-room a suitable place to prepare for death?

ERRORS.—yit for yet; con-trib-it-ed for con-trib-u-ted; mus-ling for mus-lin; nat-er-al for nat-u-ral.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—2. impossible; 3. unsuccessfully, petulant, shriek, palsied; 4. desolate, incessant; 5. hysterics; 6. drapery, paraphernalia; 7. encircled; 9. obliterate, elaborate, precision, artificial; 10. humiliating; 11. protracted; 12. corpse.

LESSON X.

RULE.—Be careful to pronounce every syllable distinctly, and not to join the words together.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE. To be read over several times by all the pupils.

He was burn'd in the hand.

He learnt the art of war in Spain.

A song bursts from the groves.

Earth's ample breast.

The busts of Fox and Pitt were there.

The songs broke the stillness of the night.

A rat ran over the roof of the house

With a raw lump of liver in his mouth.

Death of Absalom.—BIBLE.

1. And David numbered the people that were with him, and set captains of thousands and captains of hundreds over them.

2. And David sent forth a third part of the people under the hand of Joab, and a third part under the hand of Abishai the son of Zeruiah, Joab's brother, and a third part under the hand of Ittai the Gittite. And the king said unto the people, I will surely go forth with you myself also.

3. But the people answered, Thou shalt not go forth : for if we flee away, they will not care for us ; neither if half of us die, will they care for us ; but now thou art worth ten thousand of us : therefore now it is better that thou succor us out of the city.

4. And the king said unto them, What seemeth you best I will do. And the king stood by the gate side, and all the people came out by hundreds and by thousands.

5. And the king commanded Joab and Abishai and Ittai, saying, Deal gently for my sake with the young man, even with Absalom. And all the people heard when the king gave all the captains charge concerning Absalom.

6. So the people went out into the field against Israel ; and the battle was in the wood of Ephraim ;

7. Where the people of Israel were slain before the servants of David, and there was there a great slaughter that day of twenty thousand men.

8. For the battle was there scattered over the face of all the country : and the wood devoured more people that day than the sword devoured.

9. And Absalom met the servants of David. And Absalom rode upon a mule, and the mule went under the thick boughs of a great oak, and his head caught hold of the oak, and he was taken up between the heaven and the earth ; and the mule that was under him went away.

10. And a certain man saw it, and told Joab, and said, Behold, I saw Absalom hanged in an oak.

11. And Joab said unto the man that told him, And Behold, thou sawest him, and why didst thou not smite him there to the ground ? and I would have given thee ten shekels of silver, and a girdle.

12. And the man said unto Joab, Though I should receive a thousand shekels of silver in my hand, yet would I not put forth my hand against the king's son : for in our hearing the king charged thee and Abishai and Ittai, saying, Beware that none touch the young man Absalom.

13. Otherwise I should have wrought falsehood against mine own life : for there is no matter hid from the king, and thou thyself wouldst have set thyself against me.

14. Then said Joab, I may not tarry thus with thee. And he took three darts in his hand, and thrust them through the heart of Absalom, while he was yet alive in the midst of the oak.

15. And ten young men that bare Joab's armor compassed about and smote Absalom, and slew him.

16. And Joab blew the trumpet, and the people returned from pursuing after Israel; for Joab held back the people.

17. And they took Absalom, and cast him into a great pit in the wood, and laid a very great heap of stones upon him; and all Israel fled every one to his tent.

18. Now Absalom in his lifetime had taken and reared up for himself a pillar, which is in the king's dale; for he said, I have no son to keep my name in remembrance; and he called the pillar after his own name; and it is called unto this day, Absalom's Place.

19. Then said Ahimaaz the son of Zadok, Let me now run, and bear the king tidings, how that the Lord hath avenged him of his enemies.

20. And Joab said unto him, Thou shalt not bear tidings this day, but thou shalt bear tidings another day: but this day thou shalt bear no tidings, because the king's son is dead.

21. Then said Joab to Cush, Go tell the king what thou hast seen. And Cush bowed himself unto Joab, and ran.

22. Then said Ahimaaz the son of Zadok yet again to Joab, But howsoever, let me, I pray thee, also run after Cush. And Joab, said, Wherefore wilt thou run, my son, seeing that thou hast no tidings ready!

23. But howsoever, said he, let me run. And he said unto him, run. Then Ahimaaz ran by the way of the plain, and overran Cush.

24. And David sat between the two gates: and the watchman went up to the roof over the gate unto the wall, and lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold a man running alone.

25. And the watchman cried, and told the king. And the king said, If he be alone there is tidings in his mouth. And he came apace, and drew near.

26. And the watchman saw another man running: and the watchman called unto the porter, and said, Behold, another man running alone. And the king said, He also bringeth tidings.

27. And the watchman said, Methinketh the running of the foremost is like the running of Ahimaaz the son of Zadok. And the king said, He is a good man, and cometh with good tidings.

28. And Ahimaaz called, and said unto the king, All is well. And he fell down to the earth upon his face before the king, and said, Blessed be the Lord thy God, which hath delivered up the men that lifted up their hand against my lord the king.

29. And the king said, Is the young man Absalom safe? And Ahimaaz answered, When Joab sent the king's servant, and me thy servant, I saw a great tumult, but I knew not what it was.

30. And the king said unto him, Turn aside and stand here. And he turned aside, and stood still.

31. And behold, Cushie came; and Cushie said, Tidings my lord the king; for the Lord hath avenged thee this day of all them that rose up against thee.

32. And the king said unto Cushie, Is the young man Absalom safe? And Cushie answered, The enemies of my lord the king, and all that rise against thee to do thee hurt, be as that young man is.

33. And the king was much moved, and went up to the chamber over the gate, and wept; and as he went, thus he said, O my son Absalom! my son, my son Absalom! would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son.

QUESTIONS.—1. What three officers did David appoint over the host? 2. Why did not David himself go forth to the battle? 3. What charge did David give to the three officers respecting Absalom? 4. What was the result of the battle? 5. What was the fate of Absalom? 6. What motives probably influenced Joab to such a course of cruelty? 7. What was the effect of the news of Absalom's death upon king David?

ERRORS.—pil-lur for pil-lar; hend for hand; cum-man-did for com-mand-ed; Ab-s'lom for Ab sa-lom; rar-ed for rear-ed; ti-dins for ti-dings; sar-vant for ser-vant.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. thousands; 3. succor; 5. concerning; 6. Ephraim; 7. slaughter; 11. shekels; 13. otherwise; 15. compassed; 18. remembrance; 19. Ahimaaz; 25. watchman; 27. methinketh; 29. tumult; 31. avenged.

LESSON XI.

He barb'd the dart.

How do you like herbs in your broth?

Thou barb'st the dart that wounds thee.

Thou barb'd'st the dart.

Absalom.—WILLIS.

1. King David's limbs were weary. He had fled
From far Jerusalem; and now he stood,
With his faint people, for a little rest
Upon the shore of Jordan. The light wind
5. Of morn was stirring, and he bared his brow
To its refreshing breath; for he had worn
The mourner's covering, and he had not felt
That he could see his people until now.
They gathered round him on the fresh green bank
10. And spoke their kindly words; and, as the sun
Rose up in heaven, he knelt among them there,
And bowed his head upon his hands to pray.
Oh! when the heart is full—when bitter thoughts
Come crowding thickly up for utterance,
15. And the poor common words of courtesy
Are such a very mockery—how much
The bursting heart may pour itself in prayer!
He prayed for Israel; and his voice went up Strongly and fervently. He prayed for those
20. Whose love had been his shield; and his deep tones
Grew tremulous. But, oh! for Absalom—
For his estranged, misguided Absalom—
The proud, bright being, who had burst away,
In all his princely beauty, to defy

25. The heart that cherished him—for him he poured,
In agony that would not be controlled,
Strong supplication, and forgave him there,
Before his God for his deep sinfulness.

* * * *

30. The pall was settled. He who slept beneath
Was straightened for the grave; and, as the folds
Sunk to the still proportions, they betrayed
The matchless symmetry of Absalom.
His hair was yet unshorn, and silken curls
35. Were floating round the tassels as they swayed
To the admitted air, as glossy now
As when, in hours of gentle dalliance, bathing
The snowy fingers of Judea's girls.
His helm was at his feet: his banner, soiled
40. With trailing through Jerusalem, was laid,
Reversed, beside him: and the jeweled hilt,
Whose diamonds lit the passage of his blade,
Rested, like mockery, on his covered brow.
The soldiers of the king trod to and fro,
45. Clad in the garb of battle; and their chief,
The mighty Joab, stood beside the bier,
And gazed upon the dark pall steadfastly,
As if he feared the slumberer might stir.
A slow step startled him. He grasped his blade
50. As if a trumpet rang; but the bent form
Of David entered, and he gave command,
In a low tone, to his few followers,
Who left him with his dead. The king stood still Till the last echo died: then, throwing off
55. The sackcloth from his brow, and laying back
The pall from the still features of his child,
He bowed his head upon him, and broke forth
In the resistless eloquence of woe:—

1. "Alas! my noble boy! that thou should'st die!
Thou, who wert made so beautifully fair!
That death should settle in thy glorious eye,
And leave his stillness in this clustering hair!
How could he mark thee for the silent tomb,
My proud boy, Absalom!
- 2 "Cold is thy brow, my son! and I am chill,
As to my bosom I have tried to press thee.

How was I wont to feel my pulses thrill,
 Like a rich harp-string, yearning to caress thee,
 And hear thy sweet "my father" from these dumb
 And cold lips, Absalom!

1. "The grave hath won thee. I shall hear the gush
 Of music, and the voices of the young;
 And life will pass me in the mantling blush,
 And the dark tresses to the soft winds flung,
 But thou no more, with thy sweet voice, shalt come
 To meet me, Absalom!

4. "And, oh! when I am stricken, and my heart,
 Like a bruised reed, is waiting to be broken,
 How will its love for thee, as I depart,
 Yearn for thine ear to drink its last deep token!
 It were so sweet, amid death's gathering gloom,
 To see thee, Absalom!

5. "And now, farewell! 'Tis hard to give thee up,
 With death so like a gentle slumber on thee:—
 And thy dark sin!—Oh! I could drink the cup,
 If from this wo its bitterness had won thee.
 May God have called thee, like a wanderer, home,
 My erring Absalom!"

6. He covered up his face, and bowed himself
 A moment on his child: then, giving him
 A look of melting tenderness, he clasped
 His hand convulsively, as if in prayer;
 And, as a strength were given him of God,
 He rose up calmly, and composed the pall
 Firmly and decently, and left him there,
 As if his rest had been a breathing sleep.

QUESTIONS.—1. What had Absalom done to wring the heart of his father? 2. What was the manner of his death? 3. Specify some of the poetic beauties of this piece.

ERRORS.—ur-rin for err-ing; Job for Jo-ab; Is-rel for Is-ra-el; wil-ler for wil-low.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—7. mourners; 13. bitter; 15. courtesy; 16. mockery; 27. misguided, estranged; 25. cherished; 26. controlled; 31. straightened; 33. matchless, symmetry; 35. tassels; 41. reversed, jeweled, hilt; 47. steadfastly; 55. sackcloth; 58. eloquence; 3. mantling; 6. convulsively.

LESSON XII.

RULE.—Be careful to pronounce every syllable distinctly, and not to join the words together.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE. To be read over several times by all the pupils.

Many arks were seen.
 They bark'd and howl'd within.
 The culprit was hurl'd from the rock.
Words, words, words, my lord.
 Are the goods wharf'd?
 It was strongly urg'd upon him.
Remark'd'st thou that?
 He snarls, but dares not bite.
Arm'd, say ye? Yea, arm'd, my lord.

The Intemperate Husband.—SIGOURNEY.

1. There was one modification of her husband's persecutions which the fullest measure of Jane Harwood's piety could not enable her to bear unmoved. This was unkindness to her feeble and suffering boy. It was at first commenced as the surest mode of distressing her. It opened a direct avenue to her heart.

2. What began in perverseness seemed to end in hatred, as evil habits sometimes create perverted principles. The wasted invalid shrunk from his father's glance and footstep, as from the approach of a foe. More than once had he taken him from the little bed which maternal care had provided for him, and forced him to go forth in the cold of the winter storm.

3. "I mean to harden him," said he. "All the neighbors know that you make such a fool of him that he will never be able to get a living. For my part I wish I had never been called to the trial of supporting a useless boy, who pretends to be sick only that he may be coaxed by a silly mother."

4. On such occasions, it was in vain that the mother attempted to protect her child. She might neither shelter him in her bosom, nor control the frantic violence of the father. Harshness, and the agitation of fear, deepened a disease which might else have yielded. The timid boy, in terror of his natural protector, withered away like a blighted flower. It was of no avail that friends remonstrated with the unfeeling parent, or that hoary-headed men warned him solemnly of his sins. Intemperance had destroyed his respect for man, and his fear of God.

5. Spring at length emerged from the shades of that heavy and bitter winter. But its smile brought no gladness to the declining child. Consumption fed upon his vitals, and his nights were full of pain.

6. "Mother, I wish I could smell the violets that grew upon the green bank by our old dear home." "It is too early for violets, my child. But the grass is beautifully green around us, and the birds sing sweetly, as if their hearts were full of praise."

7. "In my dreams last night, I saw the clear waters of the brook that ran by the bottom of my little garden. I wish I could taste them once more. And I heard such music, too, as used to come from that white church among the trees, where every Sunday the happy people meet to worship God."

8. The mother knew that the hectic fever had been long increasing, and saw there was such an unearthly brightness in his eye, that she feared his intellect wandered. She seated herself on his low bed, and bent over him to soothe and compose him. He lay silent for some time.

9. "Do you think my father will come?" Dreading the agonizing agitation which in his paroxysms of coughing and pain, he evinced at the sound of his father's well-known footstep, she answered,—“I think not, love. You had better try to sleep.”

10. "Mother, I wish he would come. I do not feel afraid now. Perhaps he would let me lay my cheek to his once more, as he used to do when I was a babe in my grandmother's arms. I should be glad to say good bye to him, before I go to my Savior."

11. Gazing intently in his face, she saw the work of the destroyer, in lines too plain to be mistaken. "My son, my dear son—say, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." "Mother," he replied, with a sweet smile upon his ghastly features, "he is ready. I desire to go to him. Hold the baby to me, that I may kiss her. That is all. Now sing to me, and oh! wrap me close in your arms, for I shiver with cold."

12. He clung, with a death grasp, to that bosom which had long been his sole earthly refuge. "Sing louder, dear mother,—a little louder,—I cannot hear you." A tremulous tone, as of a broken harp, rose above her grief, to comfort the dying child. One sigh of icy breath was upon her cheek, as she joined it to his—one shudder—and all was over.

13. She held the body long in her arms, as if fondly hoping to warm and restore it to life with her breath. Then she laid it upon its bed, and kneeling beside it, hid her face in that grief which none but mothers feel. It was a deep and sacred solitude, alone with the dead. Nothing save the soft breathing of the sleeping babe fell upon that solemn pause.

14. Then the silence was broken by a wail of piercing sorrow. It ceased, and a voice arose—a voice of supplication for strength to endure, as “seeing Him who is invisible.” Faith closed what was begun in weakness. It became a prayer of thanksgiving to Him who had released the dove-like spirit from the prison-house of pain, that it might taste the peace and mingle in the melody of heaven.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is the subject of this piece? 2. How did the man commence abusing his child? 3. What effect was produced on the health of the child? 4. Can you describe the scene of the death-bed? 5. What did the child dream about? 6. What did he wish to say to his father?

ERRORS.—hus-buns for hus-bands; just for first; o-pun'd for o-pen-ed; rem-on-stra-ted for re-mon-stra-ted.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. modification, persecutions, unkindness, commenced, distressing; 2. perverseness, principles, maternal; 3. neighbors, supporting, coaxed; 4. harshness, protector, blighted, remonstrated, intemperance; 5. consumption; 8. unearthly, intellect; 9. agonizing, paroxysms, coughing; 14. supplication, thanksgiving

LESSON XIII.

RULE.—Give a full and prolonged sound to the vowels, yet be careful not to alter their proper sounds.

This rule is intended to correct a very common fault, which makes reading flat, inexpressive, and uninteresting. Some vowel sounds cannot be prolonged without altering the proper sound; while others may be lengthened to almost any extent, without any appreciable alteration of sound. Let every pupil repeat these words, giving the vowel sound that is italicised, a long, loud, and full sound, that gradually diminishes in strength.

Hail, all, the, isle, own, how, now, awe, show, do, ooze, eel.

Then let them repeat these sentences several times, prolonging the vowel sounds that are italicised.

Hail holy light. We praise thee, O Lord God.

High on a throne of royal stairs.

The reader will need to guard against a drawling style of reading, after these exercises.

1. She arose from her supplication, and bent calmly over her dead. The thin, placid features wore a smile, as when he had spoken of Jesus. She composed the shining locks around the pure forehead, and gazed long on what was to her so beautiful. 'Tears had vanished from her eyes, and in their stead was an expression almost sublime, as of one who had given an angel back to God.

2. The father entered carelessly. She pointed to the pallid immovable brow, 'See, he suffers no longer.' He drew near, and looked on the dead with surprise and sadness. A few natural tears forced their way, and fell on the face of the first-born, who was once his pride. The memories of that moment were bitter.—He spoke tenderly to the emaciated mother; and she, who a short time before was raised above the sway of grief, wept like an infant, as those few affectionate tones touched the sealed fountains of other years.

3. Neighbors and friends visited them, desirous to console their sorrow, and attended them when they committed the body to the earth. There was a shady and secluded spot, which they had consecrated by the burial of their few dead. Thither that whole little colony were gathered, and, seated on the fresh grass, listened to the holy, healing words of the inspired volume.

4. It was read by the oldest man in the colony, who had himself often mourned. As he bent reverently over the sacred page, there was that on his brow which seemed to say,—'This has been my comfort in my affliction.' Silver hairs thinly covered his temples, and his low voice was modulated by feeling, as he read of the frailty of man, withering like the flower of grass, before it groweth up; and of His majesty in whose sight 'a thousand years are as yesterday when it is past, and as a watch in the night.'

5. He selected from the words of that compassionate One, who "gathereth the lambs with his arm, and carrieth them in his bosom," who, pointing out as an example the humility of little children, said,—"Except ye become as one of these, ye cannot enter the kingdom of heaven," and who calleth all the weary and heavy laden to come unto him, that he may give them rest.

6. The scene called forth sympathy, even from manly bosoms. The mother, worn with watching and weariness, bowed her head down to the clay that concealed her child. And it was observed with gratitude by that friendly group, that the husband supported her in his arms, and mingled his tears with hers.

7. He returned from the funeral in much mental distress. His sins were brought to remembrance, and reflection was misery. For many nights, sleep was disturbed by visions of his neglected boy. Sometimes he imagined that he heard him coughing from his low bed, and felt constrained to go to him, in a strange disposition of kindness, but his limbs were unable to obey the dictates of his will.

8. Conscience haunted him with terrors, and many prayers from pious hearts arose, that he might now be led to repentance. The venerable man who had read the Bible at the burial of his boy, counseled and entreated him, with the earnestness of a father, to yield to the warning voice, and to 'break off his sins by righteousness, and his iniquities by turning unto the Lord.'

9. There was a change in his habits and conversation, and his friends trusted it would be permanent. She who, above all others, was interested in the result, spared no exertion to win him back to the way of truth, and soothe his heart into peace with itself, and obedience to his Maker.

10. Yet was she doomed to witness the full force of grief and of remorse upon intemperance, only to see them utterly overthrown at last. The reviving virtue, with whose indications she had solaced herself, and even given thanks that her beloved son had not died in vain, was transient as the morning dew.

11. Habits of industry, which had begun to spring up, proved themselves to be without root. The dead, and his cruelty to the dead, were alike forgotten.—Disaffection to the chastened being, who against hope still hoped for his salvation, resumed its dominion.

12. The friends who had alternately reproved and encouraged him, were convinced their efforts had been of no avail. Intemperance, "like the strong man armed," took possession of a soul that lifted no cry to God, and girded on no weapon to resist the destroyer.

QUESTIONS.—1. What effect was produced upon the father by the death of his child? 2. What were his friends disposed to hope for? 3. How did intemperance take possession of him?

ERRORS.—car-less-ly for care-less-ly; col-un-ny for col-o-ny; geth-er-ed for gath-er-ed.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. composed, expression; 2. carelessly, immovable, emaciated, affectionate; 3. committed, secluded, consecrated, inspired; 4. reverently, modulated; 5. compassionate; 6. sympathy; 7. constrained, disposition; 8. venerable, righteousness; 9. permanent; 10. overthrown; 11. disaffection; 12. alternately.

LESSON XIV.

RULE.—Give a full and prolonged sound to the vowels, yet be careful not to alter their proper sounds.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE. Repeat these words several times, prolonging the vowel sounds that are italicised.

Day, age, law, awed, father, arm, thee, eel, ooze, thy, isle, thou.
We have err'd and stray'd from thy ways, like lost sheep.
Spare thou those, O God, who confess their faults.

God's First Temples.—BRYANT.

1. The groves were God's first temples. Ere man learned
To hew the shaft, and lay the architrave,
And spread the roof above them,—ere he framed
The lofty vault, to gather and roll back
5. The sound of anthems,—in the darkling wood,
Amidst the cool and silence, he knelt down
And offered to the Mightiest solemn thanks
And supplication. For his simple heart
Might not resist the sacred influences,
10. That, from the stilly twilight of the place,
And from the gray old trunks, that high in heaven
Mingled their mossy boughs, and from the sound
Of the invisible breath, that swayed at once
All their green tops, stole over them, and bowed
15. His spirit, with the thought of boundless Power
And inaccessible Majesty. Ah, why
Should we, in the world's riper years, neglect
God's ancient sanctuaries, and adore
Only among the crowd, and under roofs
20. That our frail hands have raised! Let me, at least
Here, in the shadow of this aged wood,
Offer one hymn; thrice happy, if it find Acceptance in His ear.

Father, thy hand

- Hath reared these venerable columns; thou
25. Didst weave this verdant roof. Thou didst look down
Upon the naked earth, and, forthwith, rose
All these fair ranks of trees. They, in thy sun,
Budded, and shook their green leaves in thy breeze,
And shot towards heaven. The century-living crow,

30. Whose birth was in their tops, grew old and died
Among their branches; till, at last, they stood,
As now they stand, massy, and tall, and dark,
Fit shrine for humble worshiper to hold
Communion with his Maker. Here are seen
35. No traces of man's pomp, or pride; no silks
Rustle, no jewels shine, nor envious eyes
Encounter; no fantastic carvings show
The boast of our vain race to change the form
Of thy fair works. But thou art here; thou fill'st
40. The solitude. Thou art in the soft winds
That run along the summits of these trees
In music; thou art in the cooler breath,
That from the inmost darkness of the place,
Comes, scarcely felt; the barked trunks, the ground,
45. The fresh, moist ground, are all instinct with thee.
Here is continual worship; nature, here,
In the tranquillity that thou dost love,
Enjoys thy presence. Noislessly, around,
From perch to perch, the solitary bird
50. Passes; and yon clear spring, that, 'midst its herbs,
Wells softly forth, and visits the strong roots
Of half the mighty forest, tells no tale
Of all the good it does. Thou hast not left
Thyself without a witness, in these shades,
55. Of thy perfections. Grandeur, strength, and grace,
Are here to speak of thee. This mighty oak—
By whose immovable stem I stand, and seem Almost annihilated—not a prince,
In all the proud old world beyond the deep,
60. E'er wore his crown as loftily as he Wears the green coronal of leaves, with which Thy hand has graced him. Nestled at his root
Is beauty, such as blooms not in the glare
Of the broad sun. That delicate forest flower
65. With scented breath, and look so like a smile,
Seems, as it issues from the shapeless mould,
An emanation of the indwelling Life,
A visible token of the upholding Love,
That are the soul of this wide universe.
70. My heart is awed within me, when I think
Of the great miracle that still goes on,

- In silence, round me—the perpetual work
 Of thy creation, finished, yet renewed
 Forever. Written on thy works, I read
75. The lesson of thy own eternity.
 Lo! all grow old and die: but see, again,
 How on the faltering footsteps of decay
 Youth presses—every gay and beautiful youth—
 In all its beautiful forms. These lofty trees
80. Wave not less proudly than their ancestors
 Moulder beneath them. O, there is not lost
 One of earth's charms: upon her bosom yet
 After the flight of untold centuries,
 The freshness of her far beginning lies,
85. And yet shall lie. Life mocks the idle hate
 Of his arch enemy Death; yea, seats himself
 Upon the sepulcher, and blooms and smiles—
 And of the triumphs of his ghastly foe
 Makes his own nourishment. For he came forth
90. From thine own bosom, and shall have no end.
 There have been holy men, who hid themselves
 Deep in the woody wilderness, and gave Their lives to thought and prayer, till they outlived
 The generation born with them, nor seemed
95. Less aged than the hoary trees and rocks
 Around them; and there have been holy men,
 Who deemed it were not well to pass life thus.
 But let me often to these solitudes
 Retire, and in thy presence, reassured
100. My feeble virtue. Here, its enemies,
 The passions, at thy plainer footsteps, shrink,
 And tremble, and are still. O God! when thou
 Dost scare the world with tempests, set on fire
 The heavens with falling thunderbolts, or fill
105. With all the waters of the firmament,
 The swift, dark whirlwind, that uproots the woods
 And drowns the villages; when, at thy call,
 Uprises the great deep, and throws himself
 Upon the continent, and overwhelms
110. Its cities;—who forgets not, at the sight
 Of these tremendous tokens of thy power,
 His pride, and lays his strifes and follies by?
 O, from these sterner aspects of thy face

Spare me and mine; nor let us need the wrath

115. Of the mad, unchained elements to teach
Who rules them. Be it ours to meditate,
In these calm shades, thy milder majesty,
And to the beautiful order of thy works,
Learn to conform the order of our lives.

QUESTIONS.—1. What were the most ancient temples of worship?
2. What meditations become the forest scenes? 3. Of what kind of poetic measure is this piece?

ERRORS.—an-thums for an-thems; shad-er for shad-ow; ven-r'ble for ven-e-ra-ble; cen-try for cen-tu-ry; sof-ly for soft-ly; an-nih-il-a-ted for an-ni-hi-la-ted; co-ro-nal for cor-o-nal; in'-stinct for in-stinct'.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—2. architrave; 5. darkling, supplication; 9.
influences; 11. twilight; 13. invisible; 16. inaccessible; 17. sanctuaries; 33. worshipers; 45. instinct; 47. tranquility; 57. immovable; 58. annihilated; 67. emanation, indwelling; 68. upholding; 87. sepulcher;
104. thunderbolt; 111. tremendous.

LESSON XV.

RULE.—Give a full and prolonged sound to the vowels, yet be careful not to alter their proper sounds.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE. Prolong the vowel sounds that are italicised.

War, orb, flows, pure, down, aid, low, save.

These are thy glorious works, parent of good.

Fairest of stars! last in the train of night.

On Elocution and Reading.—N. A. REVIEW.

1. The business of training our youth in elocution must be commenced in childhood. The first school is the nur-
ery. There, at least, may be formed a distinct articulation, which is the first requisite for good speaking. How rarely is it found in perfection among our orators! Words, says one, referring to articulation, should "be delivered out from the lips, as beautiful coins, newly issued from the mint; deeply and accurately impressed, perfectly finished, neatly struck by the proper organs, distinct, in due succession, and of due weight." How rarely do we hear a speaker, whose tongue, teeth and lips, do their office so perfectly as, in any wise, to answer to this beautiful description! And the common faults in articulation, it should be remembered, take their rise from the very nursery. But let us refer to other particulars.

2. Grace in eloquence—in the pulpit, at the bar—cannot be separated from grace in the ordinary manners, in private life, in the social circle, in the family. It cannot well be superinduced upon all the other acquisitions of youth, any more than that nameless, but invaluable quality, called good breeding. You may, therefore, begin the work of forming the orator with your child; not merely by teaching him to declaim, but what is of more consequence, by observing and correcting his daily manners, motions and attitudes.

3. You can say, when he comes into your apartment, or presents you with something, a book or letter, in an awkward and blundering manner, "Return, and enter this room again," or, "Present me that book in a different manner," or, "Put yourself into a different attitude." You can explain to him the difference between thrusting or pushing out his hand and arm, in straight lines and at acute angles, and moving them in flowing, circular lines, and easy, graceful action. He will readily understand you. Nothing is more true than that "the motions of children are originally graceful;" and it is by suffering them to be perverted, that we lay the foundation for invincible awkwardness in later life.

4. We go, next, to the schools for children. It ought to be a leading object, in these schools, to teach the art of reading. It ought to occupy three-fold more time than it does. The teachers of these schools should labor to improve themselves. They should feel, that to them, for a time, are committed the future orators of the land.

5. We would rather have a child even of the other sex, return to us from school a first-rate reader, than a first-rate performer on the piano-forte. We should feel that we had a far better pledge for the intelligence and talent of our child. The accomplishment, in its perfection, would give more pleasure. The voice of song is not sweeter than the voice of eloquence; and there may be eloquent readers, as well as eloquent speakers. We speak of perfection in this art; and it is something, we must say in defense of our preference, which we have never yet seen. Let the same pains be devoted to reading, as are required to form an accomplished performer on an instrument; let us have—as the ancients had—the formers of the voice, the music-masters of the reading voice; let us see years devoted to this accomplishment, and then we should be prepared to stand the comparison.

6. It is, indeed, a most intellectual accomplishment. So is music, too, in its perfection. We do by no means undervalue this noble and most delightful art, to which Socrates applied himself, even in his old age. But one recommendation of the art of reading is, that it requires a constant exercise of mind. It demands continual and close reflection and thought; and the finest discrimination of thought. It involves, in its perfection, the whole art of criticism on language. A man may possess a fine genius, without being a perfect reader; but he cannot be a perfect reader without genius.

QUESTIONS.—1. When must the business of training in elocution be commenced? 2. What excellent comparison is made use of in illustrating proper enunciation? 3. What is the relative importance of good reading? 4. How does the power of reading with perfection, compare with the power of excellent musical performance?

ERRORS.—a-gin for a-gain; or-gins for or-gans; ar-tick-e-la-tion for ar-tic-u-la-tion; in-tel-le-junce for in-tel-li-gence; at-te-toods for at-ti-tudes; dif-frunt for dif-fer-ent.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. elocution, articulation, accurately, succession, description, particulars; 2. eloquence, superinduced, acquisitions, invaluable, consequence; 3. apartment, awkwardness, thrusting, invincible; 4. committed; 5. intelligence, accomplishment, instrument, comparison; 6. intellectual, undervalue, recommendation, discrimination.

LESSON XVI.

RULE.—Give a full and prolonged sound to the vowels, yet be careful not to alter their proper sounds.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE. Prolong the vowel sounds that are italicised.

Err, all, age, arm, old, our, eel, boy, isle.

Our Father, who art in Heaven.

Woe unto thee Chorazin.

Woe unto thee Bethsaida.

Necessity of Education.—BEECHER.

1. We must educate! We must educate! or we must perish by our own prosperity. If we do not, short will be our race from the cradle to the grave. If in our haste to be rich and mighty, we outrun our literary and religious institutions, they will never overtake us; or only come up after the battle of liberty is fought and lost, as spoils to grace the victory, and as resources of inexorable despotism for the perpetuity of our bondage.

2. But what will become of the West, if her prosperity rushes up to such a majesty of power, while those great institutions linger which are necessary to form the mind, and the conscience, and the heart of that vast world? It must not be permitted.

3. And yet what is done must be done quickly; for population will not wait, and commerce will not cast anchor, and manufactures will not shut off the steam nor shut down the gate, and agriculture, pushed by millions of freemen on their fertile soil, will not withhold her corrupting abundance.

4. And let no man at the East quiet himself, and dream of liberty, whatever may become of the West. Our alliance of blood, and political institutions, and common interests, is such, that we cannot stand aloof in the hour of her calamity, should it ever come. Her destiny is our destiny; and the day that her gallant ship goes down, our little boat sinks in the vortex!

5. The motives which call on us to co-operate in this glorious work of consummating the institutions of the West, essential to the perpetuity of her greatness and glory, are neither few, nor feeble, nor obscure.

6. All at the West is on a great scale, and the minds and the views of the people correspond with these relative proportions. It is not parsimony which renders momentary aid necessary to the West. It is want of time and assimilation for the consciousness and wielding of her powers. And how cheaply can the aid be rendered for rearing immediately the first generation of her institutions! cheaper than we could rear the barracks to accommodate an army for the defense of our liberty, for a single campaign; cheaper than the taxations of crime and its punishment during the same period, in the absence of literary and evangelical influence.

7. Consider, also, that the mighty resources at the West are worse than useless, without the supervening influence of the government of God.

8. To balance the temptation of such unrivaled abundance, the capacity of the West for self-destruction, without religious and moral culture, will be as terrific, as her capacity for self-preservation, with it, will be glorious.

9. But all the moral energies of the government of God over men, are indissolubly associated with "the ministry of reconciliation." The Sabbath and the preaching of the gospel, are Heaven's consecrated instrumentality for the efficacious administration of the government of mind in a happy, social state. By these only does the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his beams; and ignorance, and vice, and superstition encamp around evangelical institutions, to rush in whenever their light and power is extinct.

10. The great experiment is now making, and from its extent and rapid filling up, is making in the West, whether the perpetuity of our republican institutions can be reconciled with universal suffrage. Without the education of the head and heart of the nation, they cannot be; and the question to be decided is, can the nation, or the vast balance power of it be so imbued with intelligence and virtue as to bring out, in laws and their administration, a perpetual self-preserving energy? We know that the work is a vast one, and of great difficulty; and yet we believe it can be done.

QUESTIONS.—1. Why is education so necessary in this country? 2. What will, without education, contribute to our downfall? 3. What can save the nation's liberties? 4. Can the nation continue free without the influence of religion? Read and explain the first sentence of paragraph 3. 5. Why is abundance said to be "corrupting?" 6. Why should all co-operate in extending education? 7. Why are the teachers of religion called "the ministry of reconciliation?"

ERRORS.—ed-e-cate for ed-u-cate; in-ex-ore-a-ble for in-ex'-o-ra-ble; in-dis-sol-lu-bly for in-dis'-so-lu-bly; gov-um-ment and gov-er-ment for gov-ern-ment; ub-bun-dunce for a-bun-dance; ex-pur-ri-ment for experiment.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. educate, prosperity, resources, inexorable, despotism, perpetuity; 2. conscience, permitted; 3. population, commerce; manufactures, agriculture, corrupting; 4. alliance, calamity, destiny, vortex; 5. co-operate, consummating, essential, obscure; 7. supervening; 8. unrivaled, capacity, terrific, self-preservation; 9. indissolubly, reconciliation, consecrated, instrumentality, efficacious, superstition, evangelical, extinct; 10. suffrage.

LESSON XVII.

NOTE.—Give a full and prolonged sound to the vowels, yet be careful not to alter their proper sounds.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE.—Prolong the vowel sounds that are italicised.

Know, free, they, dawn, now, bay, there, shore.

Soothed with the sound the king grew vain.

Roll on, thou deep and dark blue ocean, roll.

1. I am aware that our ablest patriots are looking out on the deep, vexed with storms, with great forebodings and failings of heart for fear of the things that are coming upon us ; and I perceive a spirit of impatience rising, and distrust in respect to the perpetuity of our republic ; and I am sure that these fears are well founded, and am glad that they exist. It is the star of hope in our dark horizon.

2. Fear is what we need, as the ship needs wind on a rocking sea, after a storm, to prevent foundering. But when our fear and our efforts shall correspond with our danger, the danger is past.

3. For it is not the impossibility of self-preservation which threatens us ; nor is it the unwillingness of the nation to pay the price of the preservation, as she has paid the price of the purchase of our liberties.

4. It is inattention and inconsideration, protracted till the crisis is past, and the things which belong to our peace are hid from our eyes. And blessed be God, that the tokens of a national waking up, the harbinger of God's mercy, are multiplying upon us !

5. We did not, in the darkest hour, believe that God had brought our fathers to this goodly land to lay the foundation of religious liberty, and wrought such wonders in their preservation, and raised their descendants to such heights of civil and religious liberty, only to reverse the analogy of his providence, and abandon his work.

6. And though there now be clouds, and the sea roaring, and men's hearts failing, we believe there is light behind the cloud, and that the imminence of our danger is intended, under the guidance of Heaven, to call forth and apply a holy, fraternal fellowship between the East and the West, which shall secure our preservation, and make the prosperity of our nation durable as time, and as abundant as the waves of the sea.

7. I would add, as a motive to immediate action, that if we do fail in our great experiment of self-government, our destruction will be as signal as the birthright abandoned, the mercies abused, and the provocation offered to the efficient Heaven. The descent of desolation will correspond with the past elevation.

8. No punishments of Heaven are so severe as those for mercies abused ; and no instrumentality employed in their infliction is so dreadful as the wrath of man. No spasms are like the spasms of expiring liberty, and no wailing such as her convulsions extort.

9. It took Rome three hundred years to die ; and our death, if we perish, will be as much more terrific as our intelligence and free institutions have given to us more bone, and sinew, and vitality. May God hide from me the day when the dying agonies of my country shall begin! O, thou beloved land, bound together by the ties of brotherhood and common interest and perils, live forever—one and undivided!

QUESTIONS.—1. Why should men regard the prospects of this nation with fear? 2. What can be the advantage of a spirit of fear? 3. Why may we trust that God will not abandon our nation to ruin? 4. What will ensure her destruction? 5. Suppose our nation destroyed, how great will be the destruction? 6. What are the most dreadful punishments heaven can inflict upon a nation? 7. How would our destruction compare with that of Rome?

ERRORS.—1. un-wil-lin-ness for un-wil-ling-ness; 2. lib-y-ties for lib-er-ties; 3. 'nal-y-gy for an-al-o-gy; 4. im-nunce for im-mi-nence; 5. ben-e-fi-cient for be-nef-i-cent; 7. spas-um for spasm; 8. wail-in' and dy-in' for wail-ing and dy-ing.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—2. Correspond; 3. impossibility; 4. inconsideration, harbinger, multiplying; 5. analogy; 7. birthright; 8. instrumentality, spasm; 9. institutions.

LESSON XVIII.

RULE.—Give a full and distinct sound to the consonants in every syllable.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE. To be practised by all the pupils.

Pronounce the following words, protracting the sound of the consonant that is italicised. The object is to promote distinct enunciation.

b-ow, d-are, f-ame, g-ave, h-orse, j-ew, k-ite, l-ord, m-an, n-o, p-it, q-ueer, r-ow, s-ir, t-ake, v-ow, w-oe, y-e, g-one, th-ou, th-umb, wh-at, sh-ow, ch-urch.

Parrhasius.—WILLIS.

"Parrhasius, a painter of Athens, bought one of those Olynthian captives which Philip of Macedon brought home to sell; and, when he had him at his house, put him with extreme torture and torment, the better by his example to express the pains and passions of his Prometheus, which he was then about to paint.

1. Parrhasius stood, gazing forgetfully
Upon his canvass. There Prometheus lay,
Chained to the cold rocks of Mount Caucasus,
The vulture at his vitals, and the links
Of the lame Lemnian festering in his flesh;
And, as the painter's mind felt through the dim,
Rapt mystery, and plucked the shadows wild
Forth with its reaching fancy, and with form
And color clad them, his fine, earnest eye

Flashed with a passionate fire, and the quick curl
Of his thin nostril, and his quivering lip,
Were like the winged god's breathing from his flight.

2. "Bring me the captive now!
My hand feels skilful, and the shadows lift
From my waked spirit airily and swift;
 And I could paint the bow
Upon the bended heavens—around me play
Colors of such divinity to-day.
3. Ha! bind him on his back!
Look! as Prometheus in my picture here—
Quick—or he faints!—stand with the cordial near!
 Now—bend him to the rack!
Press down the poisoned links into his flesh!
And tear agape that healing wound afresh!
4. So—let him writhe! How long
Will he live thus? Quick, my good pencil, now!
What a fine agony works upon his brow!
 Ha! grey-haired, and so strong!
How fearfully he stifles that short moan!
Gods! if I could but paint a dying groan!
5. 'Pity' thee! So I do!
I pity the dumb victim at the altar—
But does the robed priest for his pity falter?
 I'd rack thee, though I knew
A thousand lives were perishing in thine—
What were ten thousand to a fame like mine?
6. Ah! there's a deathless name!—
A spirit that the smothering vault shall spurn,
And, like a steadfast planet, mount and burn—
 And though its crown of flame
Consumed my brain to ashes as it won me—
By all the fiery stars! I'd pluck it on me!
7. Ay—though it bid me rifle
My heart's last fount for its insatiate thirst—
Though every life-strung nerve be maddened first—
 Though it should bid me stifle

The yearning in my throat for my sweet child,
And taunt its mother till my brain went wild—

8. All—I would do it all—

Sooner than die, like a dull worm, to rot;
Thrust foully in the earth to be forgot.

Oh heavens—but I appall
Your heart, old man!—forgive—ha! on your lives
Let him not faint!—rack him till he revives!

9. Vain—vain—give o'er. His eye

Glazes apace. He does not feel you now—
Stand back! I'll paint the death-dew on his brow!

Gods! if he do not die
But for one moment—one—till I eclipse
Conception with the scorn of those calm lips!

10. Shivering! Hark! he mutters

Brokenly now—that was a difficult breath—
Another? Wilt thou never come, oh, Death!

Look! how his temple flutters!
Is his heart still? Aha! lift up his head!
He shudders—gasps—Jove help him—so—he's dead."

11. How like a mountain devil in the heart

Rules this unreined ambition! Let it once
But play the monarch, and its haughty brow
Glow with a beauty that bewilders thought
And unthrones peace for ever. Putting on

The very pomp of Lucifer, it turns
The heart to ashes, and with not a spring
Left in the desert for the spirit's lip,
We look upon our splendor and forget

The thirst of which we perish!

QUESTIONS.—1. Of what country is Willis a native? 2. Who was Philip of Macedon? 3. Can you relate the fable of Prometheus? 4. Who was the lame Lemnian? 5. What heathen deity is alluded to in line 12? 6. Why did the painter torture the old man? 7. Is such ambition justifiable? 8. What caused the fallen angels to rebel?

ERRORS.—air-ly for air-i-ly; ag-gape for a-gape; a-pall for ap-pall; fou-ly for foul-ly; tont for taunt (pronounced tant.)

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. festering; 2. airily; 4. stifles; 6. smothering; 7. yearning; 9. apace, conception; 11. unreined, unthrones.

LESSON XIX.

RULE.—Give a full and distinct sound to the Consonants in every syllable.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE. Pronounce the following words, sounding the last Consonant very distinctly.

or-b, ai-d, i-f, fa-g, Geor-ge, rich-er, a-ll, ai-m, ow-n, ti-p, wa-r, hi-ss, ha-t, gi-ve, ad-d, so-ng, brea-th, tru-th, pu-sh, bir-ch.

The Scriptures and the Savior.—ROUSSEAU.

1. The majesty of the Scriptures strikes me with astonishment, and the sanctity of the gospel addresses itself to my heart. Look at the volumes of the philosophers, with all their pomp: how contemptible do they appear in comparison to this! Is it possible, that a book at once so simple and sublime, can be the work of man?

2. Can he who is the subject of its history, be himself a mere man? Was his the tone of an enthusiast, or of an ambitious sectary? What sweetness! What purity in his manners! What an affecting gracefulness in his instructions! What sublimity in his maxims! What profound wisdom in his discourses! What presence of mind, what sagacity and propriety in his answers! How great the command over his passions! Where is the man, where the philosopher, who could so live, suffer, and die, without weakness and without ostentation!

3. When Plato described his imaginary good man, covered with all the disgrace of crime, yet worthy of all the rewards of virtue, he described exactly the character of Jesus Christ. The resemblance was so striking, it could not be mistaken, and all the fathers of the church perceived it. What prepossessions, what blindness must it be to compare the son of Sophronius, to the son of Mary! What an immeasurable distance between them! Socrates, dying without pain, and without ignominy, easily supported his character to the last; and if his death, however easy, had not crowned his life, it might have been doubted whether Socrates, with all his wisdom, was any thing more than a mere sophist.

4. He invented, it is said, the theory of moral science. Others, however, had before him put it in practice; and he had nothing to do but to tell what they had done, and to reduce their examples to precept. Aristides had been just, before Socrates defined what justice was; Leonidas had died for his country, before Socrates made it a duty to love one's country. Sparta had been temperate, before Socrates eulogized sobriety; and before he celebrated the praises of virtue, Greece had abounded in virtuous men.

5. But from whom of all his countrymen, could Jesus have derived that sublime and pure morality, of which he only has given us both the precepts and example? In the midst of the most licentious fanaticism, the voice of the sublimest wisdom was heard; and the simplicity of the most heroic virtue crowned one of the humblest of all the multitude.

6. The death of Socrates, peaceably philosophising with his friends, is the most pleasant that could be desired! That of Jesus, expiring in torments, outraged, reviled, and execrated by a whole nation, is the most horrible that could be feared. Socrates in receiving the cup of poison, blessed the weeping executioner who presented it; but Jesus in the midst of excruciating torture, prayed for his merciless tormentors.

7. Yes! if the life and death of Socrates were those of a sage, the life and death of Jesus were those of a God. Shall we say that the evangelical history is a mere fiction—it does not bear the stamp of fiction, but the contrary. The history of Socrates which nobody doubts, is not as well attested as that of Jesus Christ. Such an assertion in fact only shifts the difficulty, without removing it. It is more inconceivable that a number of persons should have agreed to fabricate this book, than that one only should have furnished the subject of it.

8. The Jewish authors were incapable of the diction, and strangers to the morality, contained in the gospel, the marks of whose truth are so striking, so perfectly inimitable, that the inventor would be a more astonishing man than the hero.

QUESTIONS.—1. What was the character of Rousseau? 2. How could an infidel testify thus without renouncing his infidelity? 3. How does Plato's character of what a good man ought to be, correspond with what Christ was? 4. What differences can you mention between the life and death of Christ and that of Socrates? 5. In what country did Alcides, Leonidas, Plato, and Socrates live? 6. What is the character of each? 7. Is the history of Socrates any better attested than that of Christ? 8. Why is it inconceivable that the book is a fiction? 9. Suppose it an invention of man—which would be the most wonderful, the inventor or the hero?

ERRORS.—gaws-p'l for gos-pel; Soc-er-tes for Soc-ra-tes; so-phist for soph-ist; vir-ty-ous and var-tu-ous for vir-tu-ous.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. majesty, astonishment, philosophers, contemptible, comparison; 2. enthusiast, sectary, gracefulness, discourses, sagacity, ostentation; 3. imaginary, resemblance, prepossession, Sophronius, immeasurable; 4. eulogized; 6. outraged, execrated, executioner, excruciating, evangelical; 8. inimitable.

LESSON XX.

RULE.—Take care not to let the voice grow weaker and weaker as you approach the end of a sentence.

Washington's Birth Day.—WEBSTER.

1. The name of Washington is intimately blended with whatever belongs most essentially to the prosperity, liberty, the free institutions, and the renown of our country. That name was of power to rally a nation, in the hour of thick-thronging public disasters and calamities; that name shone amid the storm of war, a beacon light, to cheer and guide the country's friends; it flamed, too, like a meteor, to repel her foes.

2. That name, in the days of peace, was a loadstone, attracting to itself a whole people's confidence, a whole people's love, and the whole world's respect; that name, descending with all time, spreading over the whole earth, and uttered in all the languages belonging to the tribes and races of men, will forever be pronounced with affectionate gratitude by every one, in whose breast there shall arise an aspiration for human rights and human liberty.

3. All experience evinces, that human sentiments are strongly influenced by associations. The recurrence of anniversaries, or of longer periods of time, naturally freshens the recollection, and deepens the impression, of events with which they are historically connected. Renowned places, also, have a power to awaken feeling, which all acknowledge. No American can pass by the fields of Bunker Hill, Monmouth or Camden, as if they were ordinary spots on the earth's surface. Whoever visits them feels the sentiment of love of country kindling anew, as if the spirit that belonged to the transactions which have rendered these places distinguished, still hovered around, with power to move and excite all who in future time may approach them.

4. But neither of these sources of emotion equals the power with which great moral examples affect the mind. When sublime virtues cease to be abstractions, when they become embodied in human character, and exemplified in human conduct, we should be false to our own nature, if we did not indulge in the spontaneous effusions of our gratitude and our admiration.

5. A true lover of the virtue of patriotism delights to contemplate its purest models; and that love of country may be well suspected, which affects to soar so high into the regions of sentiment, as to be lost and absorbed in the abstract feeling, and becomes too elevated, or too refined, to glow with fervor in the commendation or the love of individual benefactors.—All this is unnatural.

6. It is as if one should be so enthusiastic a lover of poetry, as to care nothing for Homer or Milton; so passionately attached to eloquence, as to be indifferent to Tully and Chatham; or such a devotee to the arts, in such an ecstasy with the elements of beauty, proportion, and expression, as to regard the master pieces of Raphael and Michael Angelo with coldness or contempt. We may be assured, gentlemen, that he who really loves the thing itself, loves its finest exhibitions. A true friend of his country loves her friends and benefactors, and thinks it no degradation to commend and commemorate them.

7. The voluntary outpouring of the public feeling, made to-day, from the north to the south, and from the east to the west, proves this sentiment to be both just and natural. In the cities and in the villages, in the public temples, and in the family circles, among all ages and sexes, gladdened voices to-day, bespeak grateful hearts, and a freshened recollection of the virtues of the father of his country.

8. And it will be so, in all time to come, so long as public virtue is itself an object of regard. The ingenuous youth of America will hold up to themselves the bright model of Washington's example, and study to be what they behold; they will contemplate his character, till all its virtues spread out and display themselves to their delighted vision; as the earliest astronomers, the shepherds on the plains of Babylon, gazed at the stars till they saw them form into clusters and constellations, overpowering at length the eyes of the beholders with the blaze of a thousand lights.

QUESTIONS.—1. When is Washington's birth-day? 2. In what year was he born? 3. In what year did he die? 4. What has Washington done for us—or in what way are we happier by his career? 5. What is the strength of associations connected with times and places, compared with the strength of those connected with character? 6. How must the lover of virtue itself, feel towards all virtuous men? 7. What will be the effect of Washington's character on future generations in America?

ERRORS.—Wash-in-ton for Wash-ing-ton; fu-ter for fu-ture; patri-ot-ism for pa-tri-ot-ism; un-nat-er-al for un-nat-u-ral.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. intimately, blended, renown, beacon, meteor; 2. loadstone, aspiration; 3. sentiments, associations, recurrence, anniversaries, ordinary; 4. abstractions, embodied, exemplified, spontaneous, effusions, admiration; 5. patriotism, benefactors; 6. enthusiastic, devotee, ecstasy, master-pieces, degradation, commemorate; 7. voluntary; 8. ingenuous vision constellations.

LESSON XXI.

RULE.—While each pupil reads, let the rest observe, and then mention which syllables were pronounced wrong, and which were omitted or indistinctly sounded.

Nature and Revelation.—BIBLE.

1. The heavens declare the glory of God ;
And the firmament showeth his handywork.
Day unto day uttereth speech,
And night unto night showeth knowledge.
2. There is no speech nor language,
Where their voice is not heard.
Their line is gone out through all the earth,
And their words to the end of the world.
3. In them hath he set a tabernacle for the sun,
Which is as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber,
And rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race.
4. His going forth is from the end of the heaven,
And his circuit unto the ends of it :
And there is nothing hid from the heat thereof.
5. The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul :
The testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple,
The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart :
6. The commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes.
The fear of the Lord is clean, enduring for ever :
The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether.
7. More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold ;
Sweeter also than honey and the honey-comb.
Moreover by them is thy servant warned :
And in keeping of them there is great reward.
8. Who can understand his errors ?
Cleanse thou me from secret faults,
Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins ;
Let them not have dominion over me :

9. Then shall I be upright,
And I shall be innocent from the great transgression.
Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart,
Be acceptable in thy sight,
O Lord, my strength, and my redeemer!

QUESTIONS.—1. What is the character of God, as exhibited by the works of nature? 2. What is the character and influence of the law of God? 3. How can a man be kept from sin?

ERRORS.—fir-m'munt for fir-ma-ment; lan-guidge for lan-guage; tab-er-nic-cle for tab-er-na-cle.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. firmament, handywork; 2. language; 3. tabernacle, bridegroom; 4. circuit; 5. testimony; 6. commandment, enlightening, judgments; 7. honey-comb; 8. presumptuous; 9. transgression, meditation, redeemer.

LESSON XXII.

RULE.—Sound the vowels correctly, and very full.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE. Prolong the following vowel sounds that are italicised. a-we, a-ge, a-rm, o-ld, o-r, ee-l, oo-ze, bu-oy, i-sle.

These are the only vowel sounds that can be much prolonged without altering their proper sound.

Niagara Falls.—HOWISON.

1. The form of the Niagara Falls is that of an irregular semi-circle, about three quarters of a mile in extent. This is divided into two distinct cascades by the intervention of Goat Island, the extremity of which is perpendicular, and in a line with the precipice, over which the water is projected. The cataract on the Canada side of the river is called the Home shoe, or Great Fall, from its peculiar form; and that next the United States, the American Fall.

2. Three extensive views of the Falls may be obtained from three different places. In general, the first opportunity travelers have of seeing the cataract is from the high-road, which at one point, lies near the bank of the river. This place, however, being considerably above the level of the Falls, and a good way beyond them, affords a view that is comparatively imperfect and unimposing.

3. The Table Rock, from which the Falls of the Niagara may be contemplated in all their grandeur, lies on an exact level with the edge of the cataract on the Canada side, and indeed forms a part of the precipice, over which the water rushes. It derives its name from the circumstance of its projecting beyond the cliffs that support it, like the leaf of a table. To gain this position, it is necessary to descend a steep bank, and to follow a path that winds among shrubbery and trees, which entirely conceal from the eye the scene that awaits him who traverses it.

4. When near the termination of this road, a few steps carried me beyond all these obstructions, and a magnificent amphitheater of cataracts burst upon my view with appalling suddenness and majesty. However, in a moment, the scene was concealed from my eyes by a dense cloud of spray, which involved me so completely, that I did not dare to extricate myself.

5. A mingled and thunder-like rushing filled my ears. I could see nothing, except when the wind made a chasm in the spray, and then tremendous cataracts seemed to encompass me on every side; while, below, a raging and foamy gulf, of undiscoverable extent, lashed the rocks with its hissing waves, and swallowed, under a horrible obscurity, the smoking floods that were precipitated into its bosom.

6. At first the sky was obscured by clouds, but, after a few minutes, the sun burst forth, and the breeze, subsiding at the same time, permitted the spray to ascend perpendicularly. A host of pyramidal clouds rose majestically, one after another, from the abyss at the bottom of the Fall! and each, when it had ascended a little above the edge of the cataract, displayed a beautiful rainbow, which in a few moments, was gradually transferred into the bosom of the cloud that immediately succeeded.

7. The spray of the Great Fall had extended itself through a wide space directly over me, and, receiving the full influence of the sun, exhibited a luminous and magnificent rainbow, which continued to over-arch and irradiate the spot on which I stood, while I enthusiastically contemplated the indescribable scene.

8. Any person, who has nerve enough, may plunge his hand into the water of the Great Fall, after it is projected over the precipice, merely by lying down flat, with his face beyond the edge of the Table Rock, and stretching out his arm to its utmost extent. The experiment is truly a horrible one, and such as I would not wish to repeat; for, even to this day, I feel a shuddering and recoiling sensation when I recollect having been in the posture above described.

9. The body of water, which composes the middle part of the Great Fall, is so immense, that it descends nearly two-thirds of the space without being ruffled or broken; and the solemn calmness, with which it rolls over the edge of the precipice, is finely contrasted with the perturbed appearance it assumes after having reached the gulf below. But the water, towards each side of the Fall, is shattered the moment it drops over the rock, and loses, as it descends, in a great measure, the character of a fluid, being divided into pyramidal-shaped fragments, the bases of which are turned upwards.

10. The surface of the gulf, below the cataract, presents a very singular aspect; seeming, as it were, filled with an immense quantity of hoar frost, which is agitated by small and rapid undulation. The particles of water are dazzlingly white, and do not apparently unite together, as might be supposed, but seem to continue for a time in a state of distinct comminution, and to repel each other with a thrilling and shivering motion, which cannot easily be described.

11. The road to the bottom of the Fall presents many more difficulties than that which leads to the Table Rock. After leaving the Table Rock the traveler must proceed down the river nearly half a mile, where he will come to a small chasm in the bank, in which there is a spiral stair-case enclosed in a wooden building. By descending the stair, which is seventy or eighty feet in perpendicular height, he will find himself under the precipice, on the top of which he formerly walked. A high but sloping bank extends from its base to the edge of the river; and, on the summit of this there is a narrow slippery path, covered with angular fragments of rock, which leads to the Great Fall.

12. The impending cliffs, hung with a profusion of trees and brushwood, over-arch this road, and seem to vibrate with the thunders of the cataract. In some places they rise abruptly to the height of one hundred feet, and display, upon their surfaces, fossil shells, and the organic remains of a former world; thus sublimely leading the mind to contemplate the convulsions which nature has undergone since the creation.

13. As the traveler advances, he is frightfully stunned by the appalling noise; clouds of spray sometimes envelope him, and suddenly check his faltering steps; rattlesnakes start from the cavities of the rocks; and the scream of eagles, soaring among the whirlwinds of eddying vapor, which obscure the gulf of the cataract, at intervals announce that the raging waters have hurled some bewildered animal over the precipice. After scrambling among piles of huge rocks that obscure his way, the traveler gains the bottom of the Fall, where the soul can be susceptible only of one emotion—that of uncontrollable terror.

14. It was not until I had, by frequent excursions to the Falls, in some measure familiarized my mind with their sublimities, that I ventured to explore the recesses of the Great Cataract. The precipice over which it rolls is very much arched underneath, while the impetus which the water receives in its descent, projects it far beyond the cliff, and thus an immense Gothic arch is formed by the rock and the torrent. Twice I entered this cavern and twice I was obliged to retrace my steps, lest I should be suffocated by the blast of dense spray that whirled around me; however, the third time, I succeeded in advancing about twenty-five yards.

15. Here darkness began to encircle me. On one side, the black cliff stretched itself into a gigantic arch far above my head, and on the other, the dense and hissing torrent formed an impenetrable sheet of foam, with which I was drenched in a moment. The rocks were so slippery, that I could hardly keep my feet, or hold securely by them; while the horrid din made me think the precipices above were tumbling down in colossal fragments upon my head.

16. A little way below the Great Fall, the river is, comparatively speaking, so tranquil, that a ferry-boat plies between the Canadian and American shores, for the convenience of travelers. When I first crossed, the heaving flood tossed about the skiff with a violence that seemed very alarming; but, as soon as we gained the middle of the river, my attention was altogether engaged by the surpassing grandeur of the scene before me.

17. I was now in the area of a semicircle of cataracts more than three thousand feet in extent, and floated on the surface of a gulf, raging, fathomless, and interminable. Majestic cliffs, splendid rainbows, lofty trees, and columns of spray, were the gorgeous decorations of this theater of wonders; while a dazzling sun shed refulgent glories upon every part of the scene.

18. Surrounded with clouds of vapor, and stunned into a state of confusion and terror by the hideous noise, I looked upwards to the height of one hundred and fifty feet, and saw vast floods, dense, awful, and stupendous, vehemently bursting over the precipice, and rolling down as if the windows of heaven were opened to pour another deluge upon the earth.

19. Loud sounds, resembling discharges of artillery or volcanic explosions, were now distinguishable amidst the watery tumult, and added terrors to the abyss from which they issued. The sun, looking majestically through the ascending spray, was encircled by a radiant halo, while fragments of rainbows floated on every side, and momentarily vanished, only to give place to a succession of others more brilliant.

20. Looking backwards I saw the Niagara River, again becoming calm and tranquil, rolling magnificently between the towering cliffs, that rose on either side. A gentle breeze ruffled the waters, and beautiful birds fluttered around, as if to welcome its egress from those clouds, and thunders, and rainbows, which were the heralds of its precipitation into the abyss of the cataract.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is the form and height of Niagara Falls? 2. Is there more than one Fall? 3. What divides it? 4. From what place may the Falls be seen in all their grandeur? 5. Where is Table Rock, and why is it so named? 6. Is there much water? 7. How does it appear below the Fall? 8. What effect is produced upon the mind by the union of all these sights and sounds?

ERRORS.—ir-reg-ler and un-reg-u-lar for ir-reg-u-lar; per-pen-dic-ler for per-pen-dic-u-lar; cat-a-rac for cat-a-ract; pint for point; con-sid-er-bly for con-sid-er-a-bly; mag-ni-fic-ient for mag-nif-i-cent; trem-en-du-ous and trem-en-de-ous for trem-en-dous; streetch-ing for stretch-ing; sing-ler for sin-gu-lar; ma-jes-tic-ly for ma-jes-ti-cal-ly.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. irregular, semi-circle, intervention; 2. extensive, unimposing, opportunity; 3. contemplated, conceal, traverses; 4. termination, amphitheater, appalling; 5. chasm, tremendous, encompass, obscurity; 6. pyramidal, gradually; 7. luminous, irradiate, indescribable; 8. sensation; 9. perturbed; 10. undulations, comminution; 11. spiral; 12. impending, vibrate, convulsion; 13. conscious, uncontrollable; 14. suffocated, impetus; 15. colossal; 16. tranquil; 17. interminable, gorgeous, decoration; 19. halo; 20. egress, herald.

LESSON XXIII.

RULE.—Let the pupil stand at a great distance from the teacher, and then try to read so loud and distinctly, that the teacher may hear each syllable.

Niagara Falls.—U. S. REVIEW.

1. Tremendous torrent! for an instant hush
The terrors of thy voice, and cast aside
Those wide-involving shadows, that my eyes
May see the fearful beauty of thy face!

6. I am not all unworthy of thy sight ;
 For, from my very boyhood, have I loved,— Shunning the meaner track of common minds,—
 To look on nature in her loftier moods.
 At the fierce rushing of the hurricane,
 10. At the near bursting of the thunderbolt,
 I have been touched with joy ; and, when the sea,
 Lashed by the wind, hath rocked my bark, and showed
 Its yawning caves beneath me, I have loved
 Its dangers and the wrath of elements.
 15. But never yet the madness of the sea
 Hath moved me as thy grandeur moves me now.

- Thou flowest on in quiet, till thy waves
 Grow broken 'midst the rocks ; thy current then Shoots onward, like the irresistible course
 20. Of destiny. Ah ! terribly they rage—
 The hoarse and rapid whirlpools there ! My brain
 Grows wild, my senses wander, as I gaze
 Upon the hurrying waters, and my sight
 Vainly would follow, as toward the verge
 25. Sweeps the wide torrent—waves innumerable Meet there and madden—waves innumerable Urge on and overtake the waves before,
 And disappear in thunder and in foam.

- They reach—they leap the barrier : the abyss
 30. Swallows, insatiable, the sinking waves.
 A thousand rainbows arch them, and the woods
 Are deafened with the roar. The violent shock
 Shatters to vapor the descending sheets :
 A cloudy whirlwind fills the gulf, and heaves
 35. The mighty pyramid of circling mist
 To heaven. The solitary hunter, near,
 Pauses with terror in the forest shades.

* * * *

- God of all truth ! in other lands I've seen
 Lying philosophers, blaspheming men,
 40. Questioners of thy mysteries, that draw
 Their fellows deep into impiety ;
 And therefore doth my spirit seek thy face
 In earth's majestic solitudes. Even here
 My heart doth open all itself to thee.

45. In this immensity of loneliness

I feel thy hand upon me. To my ear
The eternal thunder of the cataract brings
Thy voice, and I am humbled as I hear.

Dread torrent! that with wonder and with fear

50. Dost overwhelm the soul of him that looks

Upon thee, and dost bear it from itself,
Whence hast thou thy beginning? Who supplies,
Age after age, thy unexhausted springs?
What power hath ordered, that, when all thy weight

55. Descends into the deep, the swollen waves

Rise not, and roll to overwhelm the earth?

The Lord hath opened his omnipotent hand,
Covered thy face with clouds, and given his voice
To thy down-rushing waters; he hath girt

60. Thy terrible forehead with his radiant bow.

I see thy never-resting waters run,
And I bethink me how the tide of time
Sweeps to eternity. So pass of man,—
Pass, like a noon-day dream,—the blossoming days,

65. And he awakes to sorrow. * *

Hear, dread Niagara! my latest voice.

Yet a few years, and the cold earth shall close
Over the bones of him who sings thee now
Thus feelingly. Would that this my humble verse,

70. Might be, like thee, immortal. I, meanwhile,

Cheerfully passing to the appointed rest,
Might raise my radiant forehead in the clouds
To listen to the echoes of my fame.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is the difference between this lesson and the last? 2. What is the difference between prose and poetry? 3. Do the lines in poetry always rhyme? 4. What is that poetry called which does not? 5. What kind of poetry is this lesson? 6. What is meant by feet in poetic composition? 7. Answer the questions proposed in the 52, 53, 54, 55, and 56 lines. 8. How are Niagara Falls like time?

ERRORS.—ter-rus for ter-rors; shad-ders for shad-ows; har-ri-cane for hur-ri-cane; ph'los'pher for phil-os-o-pher; ap-pint-ed for ap-point-ed; e-choes for ech-oes; bust-ing for burst-ing.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—5. unworthy; 13. yawning; 16. grandeur; 19. irresistible; 25. innumerable; 30. insatiable; 35. pyramid; 39. philosophers; 43. majestic; 45. immensity; 50. overwhelm; 53. unexhausted; 55. swollen; 56. omnipotent; 60. radiant; 70. immortal.

LESSON XXIV.

RULE.—Let every pupil notice, as each one reads, when the final consonant of any word is joined to the vowel of the next word.

Character of Wilberforce.—ANONYMOUS.

1. The speeches of Mr. Wilberforce, are among the very few good things now remaining in the British Parliament: his diction is elegant, rich, and spirited; his tones are so distinct and so melodious, that the most hostile ear hangs on them delighted. Then his address is so insinuating, that if he talked nonsense, you would feel yourself obliged to hear him. I recollect when the house had been tired night after night, with discussing the endless questions relating to Indian policy, when the commerce and finances and resources of our oriental empire had exhausted the lungs of all the speakers, and the patience of all the auditors—at that period Mr. Wilberforce, with a just confidence in his powers, ventured to broach the subject of Hindoo conversion.

2. He spoke three hours, but nobody seemed fatigued: all, indeed, were pleased; some with the ingenious artifices of his manner, but most with the glowing language of his heart. Much as I differed from him in opinion, it was impossible not to be delighted with his eloquence: and I felt disposed to agree with him, that much good must arise to the human mind, by being engaged in a controversy which will exercise most of its faculties.

3. Mr. Wilberforce is now verging towards age,* and speaks but seldom; he, however, never speaks without exciting a wish that he would say more; he maintains, like Mr. Grattan, great respectability of character, by disdaining to mix in the daily paltry squabbles of party: he is no hunter after place. * * * * *

4. I confess I always look with equal respect and pleasure on this eloquent veteran, lingering among his bustling, but far inferior posterity; and well has he a right to linger on the spot where he achieved one of the greatest laurels that ever brightened in the wreath of fame: a laurel better than that of the hero, as it is not stained with blood or tears, better than that of the statesman who improves the civilization of his country, inasmuch as to create is better than to improve.

* Written in 1814 or 1815.

5. The man whose labors abolished the Slave Trade, at one blow struck away the barbarism of a hundred nations, and elevated myriads of human beings, degraded to the brute, into all the dignified capacities of civilized man. To have done this is the most noble, as it is the most useful work, which any individual could accomplish.

QUESTIONS.—1. What were the characteristics of Wilberforce's style? 2. When was this piece written? 3. What anecdote is given concerning the "Hindoo conversion?" 4. What great achievement has immortalized the name of Wilberforce?

ERRORS.—spr-it-id for spir-it-ed; in-sin-i-a-tin for in-sin-u-a-ting; rec'-lect for rec-object; Hin-dooz for Hin-doo.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. parliament, elegant, insinuating, discussing, commerce, confidence, hackneyed; 2. ingenious, impossible; 3. respectability, squabbles; 4. civilization; 5. barbarism, accomplish.

LESSON XXV.

RULE.—Sound the vowels correctly and very full.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE. Prolong the following vowel sounds that are italicised.—a-ge, a-we, a-rm, o-ld, ou-r, ee-l, oo-ze, bu-oy, i-sle.

Pleasure in Affliction.—AKENSIDE.

1. * * * Behold the ways
Of heaven's eternal destiny to man,
Forever just, benevolent and wise:
That virtue's awful steps, howe'er pursued,
5. By vexing fortune, and intrusive pain,
Should never be divided from her chaste,
Her fair attendant, pleasure. Need I urge Thy tardy thought through all the various round
Of this existence, that thy softening soul
10. At length may learn what energy the hand
Of virtue mingles in the bitter tide
Of passion, swelling with distress and pain,
To mitigate the sharp, with gracious drops
Of cordial pleasure? Ask the faithful youth,

15. Why the cold urn of her whom long he loved,
So often fills his arms; so often draws
His lonely footsteps at the silent hour,
To pay the mournful tribute of his tears?
Oh! he will tell thee that the wealth of worlds
20. Should ne'er seduce his bosom to forego
That sacred hour, when, stealing from the noise
Of care and envy, sweet remembrance soothes,
With virtue's kindest looks, his aching breast,
And turns his tears to rapture. Ask the crowd
25. Which flies impatient from the village-walk
To climb the neighboring cliffs, when far below,
The cruel winds have hurled upon the coast
Some helpless bark; while sacred pity melts
The general eye, or terror's icy hand
30. Smites their distorted limbs and horrent hair;
While every mother closer to her breast
Catches her child, and pointing where the waves
Foam through the shattered vessel, shrieks aloud,
As one poor wretch that spreads his piteous arms
35. For succor, swallowed by the roaring surge;
As now another, dashed against the rock,
Drops lifeless down: O deemest thou indeed
No kind endearment here by nature given
To mutual terror and compassion's tears?
40. No sweetly melting softness, which attracts O'er all that edge of pain, the social powers
To this, their proper action, and their end?

QUESTIONS.—1. What is the subject of this lesson? 2. What two instances are there (lines 3—7) of the figure of speech called personification? 3. From line 7 to 14 is one question: what is the sense of it in a few words? 4. What is the pleasure enjoyed by the youth bereaved of a friend, even in mourning at the grave? 5. What is the pleasure felt in viewing the horrors of a shipwreck?

ERRORS.—of'n for of-ten; a'ms for arms; trib-it for trib-ute; koiind-est and kynd-est for kind-est; rap-chur for rap-ture.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—2. destiny; 3. benevolent; 5. intrusive; 9. existence, softening; 10. energy; 13. mitigate; 14. cordial; 18. mournful; 22. remembrance; 24. rapture; 26. neighboring; 30. horrent; 37. deemest; 38. endearment; 39. compassion.

LESSON XXVI.

RULE.—In reading poetry, be careful not to join the final consonant of one word to the vowel of the next word.

EXAMPLE.—Loud as his thunder shout his praise
And sound it lofty as his throne.

The following way of reading it, shows the fault to be remedied, by observing the rule.

Lou das his thunder shout his praise
And soun dit lofty as his throne.

Make Way for Liberty.—MONTGOMERY.

At the battle of Lempach, A. D. 1315, between the Swiss and Austrians, the latter having obtained possession of a narrow pass in the mountains, formed a serried phalanx with presented spears. Until this was broken, the Swiss could not hope to make a successful attack. At last, ARNOLD WINKELRIED, leaving the Swiss ranks, rushed upon the Austrian spears, and receiving in his body as many points as possible, made a breach in the line, which resulted in the complete rout of the Austrian army.

1. "Make way for Liberty!"—he cried;
Made way for Liberty, and died!
In arms the Austrian phalanx stood,
A living wall, a human wood!
A wall, where every conscious stone
Seemed to its kindred-thousands grown;
A rampart all assaults to bear,
Till time to dust their frames should wear;
A wood, like that enchanted grove,
In which with fiends Rinaldo strove,
Where every silent tree possessed
A spirit prisoned in his breast,
Which the first stroke of coming strife
Would startle into hideous life:
So dense, so still, the Austrians stood,
A living wall, a human wood!
Impregnable their front appears,
All horrent with projected spears,
Whose polished points before them shine,
From flank to flank, one brilliant line,
Bright as the breakers' splendors run
Along the billows, to the sun.
2. Opposed to these, a hovering band,
Contending for their native land:

- Peasants, whose new-found strength had broke
 From manly necks the ignoble yoke,
 And forged their fetters into swords,
 On equal terms to fight their lords;
 And what insurgent rage had gained,
 In many a mortal fray maintained :
 Marshaled once more at freedom's call,
 They came to conquer or to fall,
 Where he who conquered, he who fell,
 Was deemed a dead, or living Tell !
 Such virtue had that patriot breathed,
 So to the soil his soul bequeathed,
 That wheresoe'er his arrows flew,
 Heroes in his own likeness grew,
 And warriors sprang from every sod
 Which his awakening footsteps trod.
3. And now the work of life and death
 Hung on the passing of a breath ;
 The fire of conflict burned within ;
 The battle trembled to begin :
 Yet while the Austrians held their ground,
 Point for attack was no where found ;
 Where'er the impatient Switzers gazed,
 The unbroken line of lances blazed ;
 That line 'twere suicide to meet,
 And perish at their tyrants' feet ;—
 How could they rest within their graves,
 And leave their homes, the homes of slaves ?
 Would they not feel their children tread
 With clanking chains above their head ?
4. It must not be : this day, this hour,
 Annihilates the oppressor's power ;
 All Switzerland is in the field,
 She will not fly, she cannot yield—
 She must not fall ; her better fate
 Here gives her an immortal date.
 Few were the numbers she could boast ;
 But every freeman was a host
 And felt as though himself were he,
 On whose sole arm hung victory,
5. It did depend on one indeed ;
 Behold him,—Arnold Winkelried !

There sounds not to the trump of fame
 The echo of a nobler name.
 Unmarked he stood amid the throng,
 In rumination deep and long,
 Till you might see with sudden grace,
 The very thought come o'er his face;
 And by the motion of his form,
 Anticipate the bursting storm;
 And by the uplifting of his brow
 Tell where the bolt would strike, and how.

6. But, 'twas no sooner thought than done;
 The field was in a moment won:—
 "Make way for Liberty!" he cried,
 Then ran, with arms extended wide,
 As if his dearest friend to clasp,
 Ten spears he swept within his grasp:
 "Make way for Liberty!" he cried,
 Their keen points met from side to side;
 He bowed among them like a tree,
 And thus made way for Liberty.
 Swift to the breach his comrades fly;
 "Make way for Liberty!" they cry,
 And through the Austrian phalanx dart,
 As rushed the spears through Arnold's heart;
 While instantaneous as his fall,
 Rout, ruin, panic, scattered all:
 An earthquake could not overthrow
 A city with a surer blow.

Thus Switzerland again was free;
 Thus Death made way for Liberty!

QUESTIONS.—1. When, and between whom, did the battle of Lempach take place? 2. How were the Austrians drawn up? 3. What was the necessity for the self-sacrifice of Winkelried? 4. How did it result? 5. Who was Rinaldo? 6. How many spears did Winkelried receive in his body? 7. Is war justifiable?

ERRORS.—as-sults for as-saults wer-et for spir-it; pat-ri-et for pa-tri-ot.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. Phalanx. 2. impregnable, horrent, breakers; 3. peasants, insurgent; 4. rumination; 5. instantaneous.

LESSON XXVII.

RULE.—Sound the vowels correctly and very full.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE. Prolong the following vowel sounds that are italicised.—a-ge, a-we, a-rm, o-ld, o-ur, ce-l, bu-oy, i-sle.

Speech of Logan, Chief of the Mingoes.—

JEFFERSON.

1. I may challenge the whole of the orations of Demosthenes and Cicero, and, indeed, of any more eminent orators, if Europe, or the world, has furnished more eminent, to produce a single passage superior to the speech of Logan, a Mingo chief, delivered to Lord Dunmore, when governor of Virginia. As a testimony of Indian talents in this line, I beg leave to introduce it, by first stating the incidents necessary for understanding it.

2. In the spring of the year 1774, a robbery was committed by some Indians upon certain land adventurers on the Ohio river. The whites in that quarter, according to their custom, undertook to punish this outrage in a summary way. Captain Michael Cresap and one Daniel Greathouse, leading on these parties, surprised, at different times, traveling and hunting parties of the Indians, who had their women and children with them, and murdered many. Among these were unfortunately the family of Logan, a chief celebrated in peace and war, and long distinguished as the friend of the whites.

3. This unworthy return provoked his vengeance. He accordingly signalized himself in the war which ensued. In the autumn of the same year a decisive battle was fought at the mouth of the Great Kenhawa, between the collected forces of the Shawnese, the Mingoes, and the Delawares, and a detachment of the Virginia militia. The Indians were defeated, and sued for peace. Logan, however, disdained to be seen among the suppliants: but, lest the sincerity of a treaty, from which so distinguished a chief absented himself, should be distrusted, he sent, by a messenger, the following speech to be delivered to Lord Dunmore.

4. “I appeal to any white man to say, if ever he entered Logan’s cabin hungry, and he gave him not meat; if ever he came cold and naked, and he clothed him not. During the course of the last long and bloody war, Logan remained idle in his cabin, an advocate for peace. Such was my love for the whites, that my countrymen pointed as they passed, and said, 'Logan is the friend of the white men.' I had even thought to live with you, but for the injuries of one man. Colonel Cresap, last spring, in cold blood, and unprovoked, murdered all the relatives of Logan, not sparing even my women and children. There runs not a drop of my blood in the veins of any living creature. This called on me for revenge. I have sought it. I have killed many. I have fully glutted my vengeance. For my country, I rejoice at the beams of peace: but do not harbor a thought that mine is the joy of fear: Logan never felt fear. He will not turn on his heel to save his life. Who is there to mourn for Logan? Not one."

QUESTIONS.—1. Who was Demosthenes? 2. Cicero? 3. When was Dunmore Governor of Virginia? 4. Who undertook to punish the Indians? 5. Whose family was killed? 6. Where was a decisive battle fought? 7. Where does the Kenhawa rise? 8. Did Logan appear among the suppliants?

ERRORS.—Vir-gin-ny for Vir-gin-i-a; pint-ed for point-ed; wec-men for wo-men (pronounced wim-men); De-mos-theens for De-mos-the-nes; cab'n for cab-in; murn for mourn.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. challenge; 2. outrage, summary; 3. signalized, detachment, glutted, harbor.

LESSON XXVIII.

RULE.—When two or more consonants come together, let the pupil be careful to sound every one distinctly.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE.

He clenched his fists.

He lifts his awful form.

He makes his payments.

Thou smoothed'st his rugged path.

The president's speech.

The Alhambra by Moonlight.—IRVING.

1. I have given a picture of my apartment on my first taking possession of it: a few evenings have produced a thorough change in the scene and in my feelings. The moon, which then was invisible, has gradually gained upon the nights, and now rolls in full splendor above the towers, pouring a flood of tempered light into every court and hall. The garden beneath my window, is gently lighted up; the orange and citron trees are tipped with silver; the fountain sparkles in the moonbeams; and even the blush of the rose is faintly visible.

2. I have sat for hours at my window, inhaling the sweetness of the garden, and musing on the checkered features of those whose history is dimly shadowed out in the elegant memorials around. Sometimes I have issued forth at midnight when every thing was quiet, and have wandered over the whole building. Who can do justice to a moonlight night in such a climate, and in such a place! The temperature of an Andalusian midnight in summer, is perfectly ethereal. We seem lifted up into a purer atmosphere; there is a serenity of soul, a buoyancy of spirits, an elasticity of frame, that render mere existence enjoyment. The effect of moonlight, too, on the Alhambra, has something like enchantment. Every rent and chasm of time, every mouldering tint and weather stain, disappears; the marble resumes its original whiteness; the long colonnades brighten in the moonbeams; the halls are illuminated with a softened radiance, until the whole edifice reminds one of the enchanted palace of an Arabian tale.

At such a time, I have ascended to the little pavilion, called the queen's toilette, to enjoy its varied and extensive prospect. To the right, the snowy summits of the Sierra Nevada, would gleam, like silver clouds, against the darker firmament, and all the outlines of the mountain would be softened, yet delicately defined. My delight, however, would be to lean over the parapet of the Tocado, and gaze down upon Granada, spread out like a map below me: all buried in deep repose, and its white palaces and convents sleeping, as it were, in the moonshine.

4. Sometimes I would hear the faint sounds of castanets from some party of dancers lingering in the Alameda; at other times, I have heard the dubious tones of a guitar, and the notes of a single voice rising from some solitary street, and have pictured to myself some youthful cavalier, serenading his lady's window; a gallant custom of former days, but now sadly on the decline, except in the remote towns and villages of Spain.

5. Such are the scenes that have detained me for many an hour, loitering about the courts and balconies of the castle, enjoying that mixture of reverie and sensation which steal away existence in a southern climate—and it has been almost morning before I have retired to my bed, and been lulled to sleep by the falling waters of the fountain of Lindaraxa.

QUESTIONS.—1. What and where is the Alhambra? 2. What are castanets? 3. What is the natural instrument of the Spaniards? 4. Where is Andalusia?

ERRORS.—firm-'ment for fir-ma-ment; dub-'us for du-bi-ous.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. apartment, splendor; 2. inhaling, checkered, memorials, enchantment, colonnades, buoyancy; 3. pavilion, varied, firmament, palaces; 4. castanets, cavalier, serenading; 5. reverie, Lindaraxa.

LESSON XXIX.

RULE.—Be careful to read the last words of every sentence with a slow and full tone.

Portrait of a Patriarch.—ADDISON.

1. I cannot forbear making an extract of several passages, which I have always read with great delight, in the book of Job. It is the account, which that holy man gives, of his behavior in the days of his prosperity, and, if considered only as a human composition, is a finer picture of a charitable and good-natured man than is to be met with in any other author.

2. "Oh that I were as in months past, as in the days when God preserved me; when his candle shined upon my head, and when, by his light, I walked through darkness; when the Almighty was yet with me; when my children were about me; when I washed my steps with butter, and the rock poured out rivers of oil.

3. "When the ear heard me, then it blessed me; and when the eye saw me, it gave witness to me; because I delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless, and him that had none to help him. The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me; and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy. I was eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame; I was a father to the poor; and the cause which I knew not I searched out.

4. "Did not I weep for him that was in trouble? Was not my soul grieved for the poor? Let me be weighed in an even balance that God may know mine integrity. If I did despise the cause of my man-servant or of my maid-servant, when they contended with me, what then shall I do when God riseth up? and when he visiteth, what shall I answer him? Did not he that made me make him also?

5. "If I have withheld the poor from their desire, or have caused the eyes of the widow to fail, or have eaten my morsel myself alone, and the fatherless hath not eaten thereof; if I have seen any perish for want of clothing, or any poor without covering; if his loins have not blessed me, and if he were not warmed with the fleece of my sheep; if I have lifted up my hand against the fatherless, when I saw my help in the gate; then let mine arm fall from my shoulder-blade, and mine arm be broken from the bone.

6. "I rejoiced not at the destruction of him that hated me, nor lifted up myself when evil found him; neither have I suffered my mouth to sin, by wishing a curse to his soul. The stranger did not lodge in the street; but I opened my doors to the traveler. If my land cry against me, or the furrows thereof complain; if I have eaten the fruits thereof without money, or have caused the owners thereof to lose their life; let thistles grow instead of wheat, and cockle instead of barley."

QUESTIONS.—1. What character is here described? 2. What is a Patriarch? 3. Considered merely as an uninspired composition, how does this compare with all others?

ERRORS.—char-i-tub-ble for char-i-ta-ble; sev-rel for sev-e-ral.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. composition, charitable; 2. almighty; 3. fatherless; 4. weighed; 5. shoulder-blade; 6. destruction, cockles.

LESSON XXX.

RULE.—Pronounce the vowels fully, and give them the proper sound.

An End of all Perfection.—MRS. SIGOURNEY.

1. I have seen man in the glory of his days and the pride of his strength. He was built like the tall cedar that lifts its head above the forest trees; like the strong oak that strikes its root deeply into the earth. He feared no danger; he felt no sickness; he wondered that any should groan or sigh at pain. His mind was vigorous, like his body; he was perplexed at no intricacy; he was daunted at no difficulty; into hidden things he searched, and what was crooked be made straight.

2. He went forth fearlessly upon the face of the mighty deep; he surveyed the nations of the earth; he measured the distances of the stars, and called them by their names; he gloried in the extent of his knowledge, in the vigor of his understanding, and strove to search even into what the Almighty had concealed. And when I looked on him I said, "What a piece of work is man! how noble in reason! how infinite in faculties! in form and moving how express and admirable! in action how like an angel! in apprehension how like a God!"

3. I returned—his look was no more lofty, nor his step proud; his broken frame was like some ruined tower; his hairs were white and scattered; and his eye gazed vacantly upon what was passing around him. The vigor of his intellect was wasted, and of all that he had gained by study, nothing remained. He feared when there was no danger, and when there was no sorrow he wept. His memory was decayed and treacherous, and showed him only broken images of the glory that was departed.

4. His house was to him like a strange land, and his friends were counted as his enemies; and he thought himself strong and heathful while his foot tottered on the verge of the grave. He said of his son—"He is my brother;" of his daughter, "I know her not;" and he inquired what was his own name. And one who supported his last steps, and ministered to his many wants, said to me, as I looked on the melancholy scene, "Let thine heart receive instruction, for thou hast seen an end of all earthly perfection."

5. I have seen a beautiful female treading the first stages of youth, and entering joyfully into the pleasures of life. The glance of her eye was variable and sweet, and on her cheek trembled something like the first blush of the morning; her lips moved, and there was harmony; and when she floated in the dance, her light form, like the aspen, seemed to move with every breeze. I returned,—but she was not in the dance; I sought her in the gay circle of her companions, but I found her not.

6. Her eye sparkled not there—the music of her voice was silent—she rejoiced on earth no more. I saw a train, sable and slow-paced, who bore sadly to an open grave what once was animated and beautiful. They paused as they approached, and a voice broke the awful silence: "Mingle ashes with ashes, and dust with its original dust. To the earth whence it was taken, consign we the body of our sister." They covered her with the damp soil and the clods of the valley; and the worms crowded into her silent abode. Yet one sad mourner lingered, to cast himself upon the grave; and as he wept he said, "There is no beauty, or grace, or loveliness, that continueth in man; for this is the end of all his glory and perfection."

7. I have seen an infant with a fair brow, and a frame like polished ivory. Its limbs were pliant in its sports; it rejoiced, and again it wept; but whether its glowing cheek dimpled with smiles, or its blue eye was brilliant with tears, still I said to my heart, "It is beautiful." It was like the first pure blossom, which some cherished plant had shot forth, whose cup is filled with a dew-drop, and whose head reclines upon its parent stem.

8. I again saw this child when the lamp of reason first dawned in its mind. Its soul was gentle and peaceful; its eye sparkled with joy, as it looked round on this good and pleasant world. It ran swiftly in the ways of knowledge; it bowed its ear to instruction; it stood like a lamb before its teachers. It was not proud, or envious, or stubborn; and it had never heard of the vices and vanities of the world. And when I looked upon it, I remembered that our Savior had said, "Except ye become as little children, ye cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven."

9. But the scene was changed, and I saw a man whom the world called honorable, and many waited for his smile. They pointed out the fields that were his, and talked of the silver and gold that he had gathered; they admired the stateliness of his domes, and extolled the honor of his family. And his heart answered secretly, "By my wisdom have I gotten all this;" so he returned no thanks to God, neither did he fear or serve him.

10. And as I passed along, I heard the complaints of the laborers who had reaped down his fields, and the cries of the poor, whose covering he had taken away; but the sound of feasting and revelry was in his apartments, and the unfed beggar came tottering from his door. But he considered not that the cries of the oppressed were continually entering into the ears of the Most High. And when I knew that this man was once the teachable child that I had loved, the beautiful infant that I had gazed upon with delight, I said in my bitterness, "I have seen an end of all perfection;" and I laid my mouth in the dust.

QUESTIONS.—1. What changes pass upon the proudest forms—and the most undaunted intellects—from the lapse of time? 2. What takes the place of childhood and manhood? 3. What becomes of vanity, as time flies past? 4. What becomes of the docility and loveliness of childhood?

ERRORS.—bud-dy for bod-y; dorn-ted and don-ted for daunt-ed, (pronounced dant-ed.)

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. perplexed, intricacy; 2. fearlessly, understanding, apprehension; 3. vacantly, intellect, treacherous; 5. joyfully, returned; 6. continued; 8. envious, stubborn; 9. honorable, extolled; 10. complaints, apartments, tottering, perfection.

LESSON XXXI.

RULE.—When any thing very solemn or devotional is to be read, there should be a full, solemn tone of voice; the piece should be read slowly, and long pauses should be made at the commas.

A Rest for the Weary.—MONTGOMERY.

1. There is a calm for those who weep,
A rest for weary pilgrims found,
They softly lie, and sweetly sleep,
Low in the ground.
2. The storm that wrecks the wint'ry sky
No more disturbs their deep repose,
Than summer evening's latest sigh
That shuts the rose.
3. I long to lay this painful head
And aching heart beneath the soil,
To slumber in that dreamless bed
From all my toil.
4. For misery stole me at my birth
And cast me helpless on the wild:
I perish; O my mother earth,
Take home thy child.
5. On thy dear lap these limbs reclined,
Shall gently moulder into thee;
Nor leave one wretched trace behind,
Resembling me.
6. Hark! a strange sound affrights mine ear;
My pulse, my brain runs wild, I rave;
Ah! who art thou whose voice I hear?
I am the Grave!

7. The Grave, that never spake before,
Hath found at length a tongue to chide :
Oh listen ! I will speak no more :
Be silent, Pride.
8. Art thou a wretch, of hope forlorn,
The victim of consuming care ?
Is thy distracted conscience torn
By fell despair ?
9. Do foul misdeeds of former times
Wring with remorse thy guilty breast ?
And ghosts of unforgiven crimes
Murder thy rest ?
10. Lash'd by the furies of the mind,
From wrath and vengeance would'st thou flee
Ah ! think not, hope not, fool, to find
A friend in me.
11. By all the terrors of the tomb,
Beyond the power of tongue to tell,
By the dread secrets of my womb,
By death and hell,
12. I charge thee live ! repent and pray ;
In dust thine infamy deplore ;
There yet is mercy ; go thy way
And sin no more.
13. Whate'er thy lot, whoe'er thou be,
Confess thy folly, kiss the rod,
And in thy chastening sorrows see
The hand of God.
14. A bruised reed he will not break ;
Afflictions all his children feel,
He wounds them for his mercy's sake,
He wounds to heal !
15. Humbled beneath his mighty hand,
Prostrate his Providence adore :
Tis done ! arise ! He bids thee stand,
To fall no more.
16. Now traveler in the vale of tears !
To realms of everlasting light
Through time's dark wilderness of years,
Pursue thy flight.
17. There is a calm for those that weep,
A rest for weary pilgrims found :
And while the mouldering ashes sleep
Low in the ground ;

18. The soul, of origin divine,
God's glorious image, freed from clay,
In heaven's eternal sphere shall shine
A star of day !

19. The sun is but a spark of fire,
A transient meteor in the sky,
The soul, immortal as its sire,
Shall never die.

Pa

QUESTIONS.—1. Who is represented as speaking in verse eighth, and onward ? 2. What is a "figure of speech ?" 3. What is that figure of speech called, which represents the grave, or any inanimate object, as speaking ? 4. With what sentiments should thoughts of death inspire us ? 5. Why is death ever desirable ? 6. To what will it introduce us ? 7. Is it wise to make no preparation for death ? 8. Should not our eternal welfare be our chief concern in the world ?

ERRORS.—sof-ly for soft-ly ; shets for shuts ; heth for hath ; lis-sen for lis-ten ; keer for care ; chas-ning for chaste-ning ; hum-bled for 'um-bled ; pur-shue for pur-sue ; pur-ish for per-ish ; im-midge for im-age.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. pilgrims ; 3. dreamless ; 5. reclined, moulder, resembling ; 6. affrights ; 7. chide ; 8. forlorn, victim, consuming, conscience ; 9. remorse ; 10. vengeance ; 11. terrors ; 12. infamy, deplore ; 13. chastening ; 14. afflictions ; 15. prostrate, adore ; 16. realms, everlasting, wilderness, pursue ; 17. mouldering ; 18. origin, eternal, sphere ; 19. transient, meteor.

LESSON XXXII.

RULE.—Let every pupil notice, as each one reads, where a comma is not marked by a proper pause.

Character of Mr. Brougham.—ANONYMOUS.

1. Brougham, is a thunderbolt. He may come in the dark, he may come at random, his path may be in the viewless and graspless air ; but still give him something solid, let him come in contact with the earth, and, be it beautiful or barren, it feels the power of his terrible visitation.

2. You see not, or rather you heed not, the agent which works : but, just as when the arch-giant of physical destroyers rends his way, you see the kingdoms of nature yielding at his approach, and the mightiest of their productions brushed aside as though they were dust, or torn as though they were gossamer.

3. While he raises his voice in the house—while he builds firmly and broadly the bases of his propositions, and snatches from every science a beam to enlarge and strengthen his work : and while he indignantly beats down and tramples upon all that has been reared by his antagonist, you feel as if the wind of annihilation were in his hand, and the power of destruction in his possession.

4. There cannot be a greater treat than to hear Brougham upon one of those questions which give scope for the mighty swell of his mind, and which permit him to launch the bolts of that tremendous sarcasm, for which he has not now, and perhaps never had, an equal in the house. When his display is a reply, you see his long and lathy figure drawn aside from others, and coiled up within itself like a snake, and his eyes glancing from under the slouched hat, as fiery and as fatal as those of the basilisk ; you mark the twin sisters of irony and contempt, playing about the tense and compressed line of his mouth.

5. Up rises the orator, slowly and clumsily. His body, swung into an attitude which is none of the most graceful. His long and sallow visage seems lengthened and deepened in its hue. His eyes, his nose, and mouth seem huddled together, as, if while he presses every illustration into his speech, he were at the same time condensing all his senses into one.

6. There is a lowering sublimity in his brows, which one seldom sees equaled : and the obliquity of the light shows the organization of the upper and lateral parts of his forehead, proud and palpable as the hills of his native north. His left hand is extended with the palm, prepared as an anvil, upon which he is ever and anon to hammer, with the forefinger of his right, as the preparation to that full swing which is to give life to every muscle, and motion to every limb.

7. He speaks ! In the most powerful and sustained, and at the same time, the most close, clear and logical manner, does he demolish the castle, which his opponent had built for himself. You hear the sounds, you see the flash, you look for the castle, and it is not. Stone after stone, turret after turret, battlement after battlement, and wing after wing, are melted away, and nothing left, save the sure foundation, upon which the orator himself may build.

8. There are no political bowels in him. He gives no quarter, and no sooner has he razed the fort, than he turns to torture the garrison. It is now that his mock solemnity is something more terrible than the satire of Canning, the glow of Burdett, or the glory of Mackintosh.

9. His features, (which are always grave) assume the very depth of solemnity; and his voice (which is always solemn) falls into that under soprano, (that visionary tone between speech and whisper) which men employ when they speak of their own graves, and coffins.

10. You would imagine it not audible, and yet its lowest syllable runs through the house like wild-fire. You would think it meant only for the ear of him who is the subject of it, yet it comes immediately, and powerfully, and without the possibility of being forgotten, to every one within the walls.

11. You would think it the fond admonition of a sainted father to the errors of a beloved son; and yet, it has in reality more of that feeling which the Devil is said to exercise, when he acts as the accuser of the brethren. You may push aside the bright thing which raises a laugh; you may find a cover from the wit which ambles to you on antithesis or quotation; but against the home reproof of Brougham there is no defence; its course is so firm that you cannot dash it aside.

QUESTIONS.—1. To what is Brougham (Broome.) compared? 2. What is the marked attribute of his style? 3. His personal appearance? 4. His manner, voice, gestures, &c.

ERRORS.—hed for had; lay-ty for la-ty (lah-ty); sal-ler for sal-low.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. thunderbolt, viewless, graspless; 2. arch-giant, mightiest, productions, gossamer; 3. propositions, strengthen, indignantly, antagonist, annihilation; 4. tremendous, sarcasm, slouched, basilisk, compressed; 5. lengthened, huddled, illustration; 6. organization; 7. battlement; 9. visionary; 10. immediately; 11. antithesis.

LESSON XXXIII.

RULE.—Be careful to speak such little words as of, the, a, in, from, &c., very distinctly, and yet not to hold so long on them as on the other more important words.

Elevated Character of Woman.—CARTER.

1. The influence of the female character is now felt and acknowledged in all the relations of life. I speak not now of those distinguished women, who instruct their age through the public press. Nor of those whose devout strains we take upon our lips when we worship. But of a much larger class; of those whose influence is felt in the relations of neighbor, friend, daughter, wife, mother.

2. Who waits at the couch of the sick to administer tender charities while life lingers, or to perform the last acts of kindness when death comes? Where shall we look for those examples of friendship, that most adorn our nature; those abiding friendships, which trust even when betrayed, and survive all changes of fortune?

3. Where shall we find the brightest illustrations of filial piety? Have you ever seen a daughter, herself perhaps timid and helpless, watching the decline of an aged parent, and holding out with heroic fortitude to anticipate his wishes, to administer to his wants, and to sustain his tottering steps to the very borders of the grave?

4. But in no relation does woman exercise so deep an influence, both immediately and prospectively, as in that of mother. To her is committed the immortal treasure of the infant mind. Upon her devolves the care of the first stages of that course of discipline which is to form of a being, perhaps the most frail and helpless in the world, the fearless ruler of animated creation, and the devout adorer of its great Creator.

5. Her smiles call into exercise the first affections that spring up in our hearts. She cherishes and expands the earliest germs of our intellects. She breathes over us her deepest devotions. She lifts our little hands, and teaches our little tongues to lisp in prayer.

6. She watches over us like a guardian angel, and protects us through all our helpless years, when we know not of her cares and her anxieties on our account. She follows us into the world of men, and lives in us, and blesses us, when she lives not otherwise upon the earth.

7. What constitutes the center of every home? Whither do our thoughts turn, when our feet are weary with wandering, and our hearts sick with disappointments? Where shall the truant and forgetful husband go for sympathy unalloyed and without design, but to the bosom of her who is ever ready and waiting to share in his adversity or his prosperity? And if there be a tribunal where the sins and the follies of a froward child may hope for pardon and forgiveness this side of heaven, that tribunal is the heart of a fond and devoted mother.

8. Finally, her influence is felt deeply in religion. "If Christianity should be compelled to flee from the mansions of the great, the academies of philosophers, the halls of legislators, or the throng of busy men, we should find her last and purest retreat with woman at the fireside ; her last altar would be the female heart ; her last audience would be the children gathered round the knees of the mother ; her last sacrifice, the secret prayer escaping in silence from her lips, and heard, perhaps, only at the throne of God.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is the influence of female character ? 2. What traits of this influence are mentioned in sections 1 and 2 ? 3. What is the principal sphere of woman's influence ? 4. How is her influence, in respect to religion, compared with that of man ?

ERRORS.—sac-ri-fis for sac-ri-fice ; hert for heart ; leg-es-la-ters for leg-is-la-tors ; chris-chan-i-ty for chris-ti-an-i-ty ; Gud for God.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. distinguished, neighbor, daughter ; 2. administer, betrayed ; 3. illustrations ; 4. exercise, immediately, prospectively ; 5. germs ; 6. guardian ; 7. truant, disappointments, froward ; 8. academies, philosophers.

LESSON XXXIV.

RULE.—When reading poetry that rhymes, there should be a very slight pause after the words that are similar in sound, though the sense may not require it.

EXAMPLE.—Sweet it is, at eve to rest
On the flowery meadow's breast.

Here a slight pause should be made after the word rest, which would not be made if it were prose instead of poetry.

The Passions.—COLLINS.

1. When Music, heavenly maid ! was young,—
While, yet, in early Greece, she sung,
The Passions oft, to hear her shell,
Thronged around her magic cell ;
Exulting—trembling—raging—fainting,—
Possessed beyond the muses' painting :
By turns, they felt the glowing mind
Disturbed, delighted, raised, refined ;
Till once, 'tis said, when all were fired,
Filled with fury, rapt, inspired,
From the supporting myrtles round,
They snatched her instruments of sound ;
And, as they oft had heard, apart,
Sweet lessons of her forceful art,
Each—(for madness ruled the hour—)
Would prove his own expressive power.

2. First, Fear, his hand, its skill to try,
Amid the chords bewildered laid;
And back recoiled, he knew not why,
E'en at the sound himself had made.
3. Next Anger rushed—his eyes, on fire,
In lightnings owned his secret stings;
In one rude clash he struck the lyre—
And swept, with hurried hand, the strings.
4. With woful measures, wan Despair—
Low sullen sounds his grief beguiled;
A solemn, strange, and mingled air;
'Twas sad, by fits—by starts, 'twas wild.
5. But thou, Oh Hope! with eyes so fair,
What was thy delighted measure!
Still it whispered promised pleasure,
And bade the lovely scenes at distance hail.
Still would her touch the strain prolong;
And from the rocks, the woods, the vale,
She called on Echo still through all her song;
And where her sweetest theme she chose,
A soft responsive voice was heard at every close;
And Hope, enchanted, smiled and waved her golden hair.
6. And longer had she sung—but, with a frown,
Revenge impatient rose.
He threw his blood-stained sword in thunder down,
And, with a withering look,
The war-denouncing trumpet took,
And blew a blast so loud and dread,
Were ne'er prophetic sounds so full of wo;
And ever and anon, he beat
The doubling drum with furious heat;
And though, sometimes, each dreary pause between,
Dejected Pity, at his side,
Her soul-subduing voice applied,
Yet still he kept his wild unaltered mien;
While each strain'd ball of sight seem'd bursting from his head.
7. Thy numbers, Jealousy, to nought were fixed—
Sad proof of thy distressful state;
Of differing themes the veering song was mixed;
And now it courted Love—now, raving, called on Hate
8. With eyes upraised, as one inspired,
Pale Melancholy sat retired;
And, from her wild sequestered seat,
In notes by distance made more sweet,

Poured through the mellow horn her pensive soul,
 And dashing soft from rocks around,
 Bubbling runnels joined the sound :
 Through glades and glooms the mingled measures stole,
 Or, o'er some haunted streams, with fond delay,
 (Round a holy calm diffusing,
 Love of peace and lonely musing,)
 In hollow murmurs—died away.

9. But, oh ! how altered was its sprightlier tone,
 When Cheerfulness—a nymph of healthiest hue—
 Her bow across her shoulder flung,
 Her buskins gemmed with morning dew,
 Blew an inspiring air, that dale and thicket rung :
 The hunter's call, to Faun and Dryad known.
 The oak-crowned sisters and their chaste-eyed queen,
 Satyrs and sylvan boys were seen,
 Peeping from forth their alleys green :
 Brown Exercise rejoiced to hear,
 And Sport leaped up and seized his beechen spear.

10. Last came Joy's ecstatic trial :—
 He with viny crown advancing,
 First to the lively pipe his hand addressed ;
 But soon he saw the brisk awakening viol,
 Whose sweet, entrancing voice he loved the best.
 They would have thought, who heard the strain,
 They saw in Tempé's vale her native maids,
 Amidst the festal-sounding shades,
 To some unwearied minstrel dancing :
 While, as his flying fingers kissed the strings,
 Love framed with Mirth a gay fantastic round,
 (Loose were her tresses seen, her zone unbound,)
 And he, amidst his frolic play,
 As if he would the charming air repay,
 Shook thousand odors from his dewy wings.

QUESTIONS.—What is that figure of speech, by which passions, &c. are addressed as animated beings ? 2. What is meant by "shell" in line 3 ? 3. What is this ode intended to illustrate ? 4. Who were the Fauns and Dryads ? 5. What do you know of Tempé's vale ?

ERRORS.—'zult-in' for ex-ult-ing ; per-sess-ed for pos-sess-ed ; ris-pon-sive for re-spon-sive ; hont-ed for haunt-ed.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. passions, expressive ; 2. recoiled ; 4. beguiled ; 5. enchanted ; 6. revenge ; 8. sequestered ; 9. nymph ; 10. ecstatic, entrancing, tresses, festal, fantastic.

LESSON XXXV.

RULE.—Avoid reading in a monotonous way, as if you were not interested, and did not understand what is read.

Modes of Writing.—MONTGOMERY.

1. That the art of writing was practised in Egypt before the emancipation of the Israelities, appears almost certain from their frequent and familiar mention of this mode of keeping memorials. When the people had provoked the Lord to wrath, by making and worshiping the golden calf, Moses, interceding in their behalf, says, "Yet now, if thou wilt forgive their sin; and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written. And the Lord said unto Moses, Whosoever sinneth, him will I blot out of my book."

2. The allusion here is to a table of genealogy, the muster-roll of an army, a register of citizenship, or even to those books of chronicles which were kept by order of ancient oriental princes, of the events of their reigns, for reference and remembrance.

3. Besides, such a mode of publishing important documents, is alluded to, not merely as nothing new, but as if even the common people were practically acquainted with it. "And thou shalt bind them (the statutes and testimonies of the Lord) as a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes, and thou shalt write them upon the posts of thine house, and upon all thy gates." There are various parallel passages which no caviling of commentators can convert from plain meaning into paradox.

4. But not the Egyptians and Hebrews alone possessed this invaluable knowledge at the time of which we speak (from fourteen to seventeen hundred years before Christ;) we have direct and incidental testimony, both in sacred and profane history, that the Phenicians, Arabians, and Chaldeans were instructed in the same. The book of Job lays the scene and the season of his affliction about this era, and in the north of Arabia.

5. That extraordinary composition—extraordinary indeed, whether it be regarded as an historical, dramatic, or poetic performance—contains more curious and minute information concerning the manners and customs, the literature and philosophy, the state of arts and sciences, during the patriarchal ages, than can be collected in scattered hints from all later works put together.

6. In reference to the art and the materials of writing then in use, we meet with the following sublime and affecting apostrophe—"O that my words were now written! O that they were printed (impressed or traced out) in a book! That they were graven with an iron pen and lead, in the rock for ever!"

7. The latter aspiration probably alludes to the very ancient practice of hewing characters into the faces of vast rocks, as eternal memorials of persons and events. It is said by travelers whose testimony seems worthy of credence, that various fragments of such inscriptions, now utterly undecipherable, may be seen to this day in the wilderness of Arabia Petrea—monuments at once of the grasp and the limitation of the mental power of man; thus making the hardest substances in nature the depositories of his thoughts, and yet betrayed in his ambitious expectation of so perpetuating them.

8. The slow influences of the elements have been incessantly, though insensibly, obliterating what the chisel had ploughed into the solid marble, till at length nothing remains but a mockery of skeleton letters, so unlike their pristine forms, so unable to explain their own meaning, that you might as well seek among the human relics in a charnel-vault the resemblances of the once living personages,—or invoke the dead bones to tell their own history,—as question these dumb rocks concerning the records engraven on them.

9. The passage just quoted shows the state of alphabetical writing in the age of Job, and according to the best commentators, he describes three modes of exercising it:—"O that my words were now written,—traced out in characters,—in a book composed of palm-leaves, or on a roll of linen! O that they were engraven with a pen of iron on tablets of lead, or indented in the solid rock to endure to the end of time!"

10. Arguing against the perverse sophistry of his friends that he must have been secretly a wicked man, because such awful calamities, which they construed into divine judgments, had befallen him; so fast does he hold his integrity, that, not only with passing words, liable to be forgotten as soon as uttered, does he maintain it; but by every mode that could give his expressions publicity and ensure them perpetuity, he longs that his confidence in God to vindicate him might be recorded, whatever might be the issue of those evils to himself, even though he were brought down by them to death and corruption, descending not only with sorrow, but with ignominy to the grave. For saith he, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter day on the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God, whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold though my reins be consumed within me."

11. Had these words of the patriarch been indeed "engraven with a pen of iron on the rock for ever," yet without some more certain medium of transmission to posterity, they would have been unknown at this day, or only speaking in the desert with the voice of silence, which no eye could interpret, no mind could hear.

12. But, being inscribed on materials as frail as the leaves in my hand, yet capable of infinitely multiplied transcription, they can never be lost; for though the giant-characters engraved in everlasting flint would ere now have been worn down by the perpetual foot of time, yet, committed with feeble ink to perishable paper, liable "to be crushed before the moth," or destroyed by the touch of fire or water, the good man's hope can never fail, even on earth; it was "a hope full of immortality;" and still through all ages, and in all lands, while the sun and moon endure, it shall be said by people of every kindred and nation, and in every tongue spoken under heaven, "I know that my Redeemer liveth."

QUESTIONS.—1. How early does it appear that the art of writing was practiced in Egypt? 2. How does it appear? 3. In the verse quoted (1), to what is allusion made? 4. How many years before Christ was this? 5. What other nations besides the Jews and Egyptians possessed this knowledge? 6. What is said of the book of Job? 7. What ancient practice is referred to in the quotation (6)? 8. Are there any remains of such inscriptions known? 9. What was the state of alphabetic writing at the time of Job? 10. What is the comparative durability of written documents, and monumental inscriptions?

ERRORS.—gen-e-ol-o-gy for gen-e-al-o-gy; prac-tic'-ly for practic-al-ly; pat-re-arch for pa-tri-arch; arth for earth.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. emancipation, memorials; 2. allusion, genealogy, chronicles, citizenship, oriental; 3. documents, practically, acquainted, testimonies, frontlets, caviling, commentators, paradox; 5. extraordinary, composition, dramatic, philosophy, patriarchal, apostrophe; 7. aspiration, credence, fragments, undecipherable, wilderness, depositories, perpetuating; 8. incessantly, obliterating; 9. sophistry.

LESSON XXXVI.

RULE.—Do not read poetry with a drawling sing-song tone.

Joyous Devotion.—BIBLE.

1. Praise ye the Lord.
 Praise ye the Lord from the heavens :
 Praise ye him in the heights.
 Praise ye him, all his angels :
 Praise ye him, all his hosts.
 Praise ye him, sun and moon :
 Praise him, all ye stars of light.
 Praise him, ye heavens of heavens,
 And ye waters that be above the heavens.
 Let them praise the name of the Lord :
 For he commanded—and they were created.
 He hath also stablished them for ever and ever :
 He hath made a decree which shall not pass.

2. Praise the Lord from the earth,
 Ye dragons, and all deeps :
 Fire, and hail ; snow, and vapors ;
 Stormy wind fulfilling his word :
 Mountains, and all hills ;
 Fruitful trees, and all cedars ;
 Beasts, and all cattle ;
 Creeping things, and flying fowl :
 Kings of the earth, and all people ;
 Princes, and all judges of the earth ;
 Both young men and maidens :
 Old men, and children :
 Let them praise the name of the Lord :
 For his name alone is excellent ;
 His glory is above the earth and heaven.
 He also exalteth the horn of his people,
 The praise of all his saints ;
 Even of the children of Israel, a people near unto him.
 Praise ye the Lord !

QUESTIONS.—1. What is meant by calling upon things inanimate and upon brutes to praise God ? 2. What reason is assigned why God should be universally praised ?

ERRORS.—osts for hosts ; cra-ted for cre-a-ted ; Iz-ral for Is-ra-el ; chil-dern for chil-dren ; ann-gels for an-gels.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. heavens ; commanded ; stablished ; 2 dragons ; fulfilling ; mountains ; exalteth.

LESSON XXXVII.

RULE.—In reading poetry, be careful to avoid that sort of sing-song tone, which is made by marking too strongly with the voice the accented syllables.

EXAMPLE.—Sweet is the work, my God my King,
To praise thy name, give thanks and sing.

Read the above example, accenting the italicized words; and the fault which is to be avoided will be perceived.

A Night Scene in Turkey.—BYRON.

1. 'Twas midnight : on the mountains brown
The cold round moon shone brightly down ;
Blue rolled the ocean, blue the sky
Spread like an ocean hung on high,
5. Bespangled with those isles of light,
So wildly, spiritually bright ;
Who ever gazed upon them shining.
And turned to earth without repining,
Nor wished for wings to fly away,
10. And mix with their eternal ray ?
The waves on either shore lay there
Calm, clear, and azure as the air,
And scarce their foam the pebbles shook,
But murmured meekly as the brook.
15. The winds were pillowed on the waves,
The banners drooped along their staves,
And as they fell, around them furling,
Above them shone the crescent curling ;
And that deep silence was unbroke
20. Save when the watch his signal spoke,
Save when the steed neighed oft and shrill,
And echo answered from the hill,
And the wide hum of that wild host
Rustled like leaves from coast to coast,
25. As rose the Muezzin's voice in air
In midnight call to wonted prayer.
It rose, that chaunted, mournful strain,
Like some lone spirit's o'er the plain ;
'Twas musical, but sadly sweet,
30. Such as when winds and harp strings meet ;
And take a long, unmeasured tone,
To mortal minstrelsy unknown :
It seemed to those within the wall,
A cry prophetic of their fall ;
35. It struck even the besieger's ear
With something ominous and drear, an undefined and sudden thrill,

Which makes the heart a moment still;
Then beat with quicker pulse, ashamed
40. Of that strange sense its silence framed;
Such as a sudden passing bell
Wakes, though but for a stranger's knell

QUESTIONS.—1. In this lesson there are many similes—can you select them? 2. Select a metaphor, and point out the difference between it and the simile? 3. What Mahommedan custom is referred to in lines 25—26?

ERRORS.—spir-it-i-al-ly, and spir-it-chal-ly, and spir-it-chew-al-ly for spir-it-u-al-ly; i-ther or a-ther for ei-ther; az-yer for a-zure; pil-ler'd for pil-low'd; fur-lin', cur-lin', re-pi-nin', shi-nin', &c., for furl-ing, curl-ing, re-pi-ning, shi-ning, &c.; skyi for sky.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. midnight; 5. bespangled; 6. spiritually; 8. repining; 12. azure; 14. murmured; 17. furling; 25. muezzins; 27. chaunted, mournful; 29. musical; 31. unmeasured; 32. minstrelsy; 34. prophetic; 35. besieger's; 36. ominous; 37. undefined.

LESSON XXXVIII.

RULE.—Be careful not to dwell long on the little words like at, on, in, by, the, a, and,—and yet take care to pronounce them distinctly.

Criminality of Dueling.—NOTT.

1. Hamilton yielded to the force of an imperious custom. And yielding, he sacrificed a life in which all had an interest—and he is lost—lost to his country—lost to his family—lost to us. For this rash act, because he disclaimed it, and was penitent, I forgive him. But there are those whom I cannot forgive. I mean not his antagonist—over whose erring steps, if there be tears in heaven, a pious mother looks down and weeps.

2. If he be capable of feeling, he suffers already all that humanity can suffer. Suffers, and wherever he may fly will suffer, with the poignant recollection of having taken the life of one who was too magnanimous in return to attempt his own. If he had known this, it must have paralyzed his arm while he pointed, at so incorruptible a bosom, the instrument of death. Does he know this now, his heart, if it be not adamant, must soften—if it be not ice, it must melt. . . . But on this article I forbear. Stained with blood as he is, if he be penitent, I forgive him—and if he be not, before these altars, where all of us appear as suppliants,

I wish not to excite your vengeance, but rather, in behalf of an object rendered wretched and pitiable by crime, to wake your prayers.

3. But I have said, and I repeat it, there are those whom I cannot forgive. I cannot forgive that minister at the altar who has hitherto forbore to remonstrate on this subject. I cannot forgive that public prosecutor, who, entrusted with the duty of avenging his country's wrongs, has seen these wrongs, and taken no measures to avenge them. I cannot forgive that judge upon the bench, or that governor in the chair of state, who has lightly passed over such offences. I cannot forgive the public in whose opinion the duelist finds a sanctuary. I cannot forgive you, my brethren, who till this late hour have been silent, whilst successive murders were committed.

4. No; I cannot forgive you, that you have not in common with the freemen of this state, raised your voice to the powers that be, and loudly and explicitly demanded an execution of your laws—demanded this in a manner, which if it did not reach the ear of government, would at least have reached the heavens, and have pleaded your excuse before the God that filleth them: in whose presence as I stand, I should not feel myself innocent of the blood that crieth against us, had I been silent. But I have not been silent. Many of you who hear me are my witnesses—the walls of yonder temple, where I have heretofore addressed you, are my witnesses, how freely I have animadverted on this subject, in the presence both of those who have violated the laws, and of those whose indispensable duty it is to see the laws executed on those who violate them.

5. I enjoy another opportunity; and would to God, I might be permitted to approach for once the last scene of death. Would to God, I could there assemble on the one side the disconsolate mother with her seven fatherless children—and on the other those who administer the justice of my country. Could I do this, I would point them to these sad objects. I would entreat them, by the agonies of bereaved fondness, to listen to the widow's heartfelt groans; to mark the orphan's sighs and tears—and having done this, I would uncover the breathless corpse of Hamilton—I would lift from his gaping wound his bloody mantle—I would hold it up to heaven before them, and I would ask, in the name of God, I would ask, whether at the sight of it they felt no compunction. Ye who have hearts of pity—ye who have experienced the anguish of dissolving friendship—who have wept, and still weep over the mouldering ruins of departed kindred, ye can enter into this reflection.

6. O thou disconsolate widow! robbed, so cruelly robbed, and in so short a time, both of a husband and a son! what must be the plenitude of thy suffering! Could we approach thee, gladly would we drop the tear of sympathy, and pour into thy bleeding bosom the balm of consolation! But how could we comfort her whom God hath not comforted! To his throne let us lift up our voice and weep. O God! if thou art still the widow's husband, and the father of the fatherless—if, in the fullness of thy goodness, there be yet mercy in store for miserable mortals, pity, O pity this afflicted mother, and grant that her hapless orphans may find a friend, a benefactor, a father in thee!

QUESTIONS.—1. To what imperious custom did Hamilton yield? 2. Why does the writer forgive him? 3. What is the duty of the minister, of the public prosecutor, of the judge, of the governor, of the public—in reference to dueling?

ERRORS.—ruth-er for rath-er; wretch-id for wretch-ed; ob-jic for ob-ject; breth-ern for breth-ren; poig-nant for poign-ant.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. imperious, disclaimed, antagonist; 2. poignant, magnanimous, paralyzed, incorruptible, vengeance; 3. forborne, prosecutor, sanctuary, successive; 4. explicitly, animadverted, indispensable; 5. opportunity, disconsolate, compunction.

LESSON XXXIX.

RULE.—When several consonants come together, give the full sound to each of them.

EXAMPLE.—Pronounce the following words, sounding fully the consonants that are italicised.—or-b'd, pro-b'd'st, trou-bl'd'st, trou-bles, trou-bl'st, ribs, rob-b'st, han-dl'd, fon-dl'st, brea-dths, lau-gh'st.

Character of Napoleon Bonaparte.

PHILLIPS.

1. He is fallen! We may now pause before that splendid prodigy, which towered amongst us like some ancient ruin, whose frown terrified the glance its magnificence attracted. Grand, gloomy, and peculiar, he sat upon the throne a sceptered hermit, wrapt in the solitude of his own originality. A mind, bold, independent, and decisive—a will, despotic in its dictates—an energy that distanced expedition, and a conscience pliable to every touch of interest, marked the outline of this extraordinary character—the most extraordinary, perhaps, that in the annals of this world, ever rose, or reigned, or fell. Flung into life, in the midst of a revolution that quickened every energy of a people who acknowledge no superior, he commenced his course, a stranger by birth, and a scholar by charity ! With no friend but his sword, and no fortune but his talents, he rushed in the list where rank, and wealth, and genius had arrayed themselves, and competition fled from him as from the glance of destiny.

2. He knew no motive but interest—acknowledged no criterion but success—he worshiped no God but ambition, and with an eastern devotion he knelt at the shrine of his idolatry. Subsidiary to this, there was no creed that he did not profess, there was no opinion that he did not promulgate ; in the hope of a dynasty, he upheld the crescent ; for the sake of a divorce, he bowed before the cross : the orphan of St. Louis, he became the adopted child of the republic : and with a parricidal ingratitude, on the ruins both of the throne and tribune, he reared the throne of his despotism. A professed catholic, he imprisoned the pope ; a pretended patriot, he impoverished the country ; and, in the name of Brutus, he grasped without remorse, and wore without shame, the diadem of the Cæsars !

3. Through this pantomime of policy, fortune played the clown to his caprices. At his touch, crowns crumbled, beggars reigned, systems vanished, the wildest theories took the color of his whim, and all that was venerable, and all that was novel, changed places with the rapidity of a drama. Even apparent defeat assumed the appearance of victory—his flight from Egypt confirmed his destiny—ruin itself only elevated him to empire. But if his fortune was great, his genius was transcendent ; decision flashed upon his councils ; and it was the same to decide and to perform. To inferior intellects his combinations appeared perfectly impossible, his plans perfectly impracticable ; but, in his hands, simplicity marked their development, and success vindicated their adoption. His person partook the character of his mind—if the one never yielded in the cabinet, the other never bent in the field.—Nature had no obstacle that he did not surmount—space no opposition he did not spurn ; and whether amid Alpine rocks, Arabian sands, or Polar snows, he seemed proof against peril, and empowered with ubiquity !

4. The whole continent trembled at beholding the audacity of his designs, and the miracle of their execution. Scepticism bowed to the prodigies of his performance; romance assumed the air of history; nor was there aught too incredible for belief, or too fanciful for expectation, when the world saw a subaltern of Corsica waving his imperial flag over her most ancient capitals. All the visions of antiquity became commonplaces in his contemplation; kings were his people—nations were his outposts; and he disposed of courts, and crowns, and camps, and churches, and cabinets, as if they were titular dignitaries of the chess-board!—Amid all these changes, he stood immutable as adamant.

5. It mattered little whether in the field or in the drawing-room—with the mob or the levee—wearing the jacobin bonnet or the iron crown—banishing a Braganza, or espousing a Hapsburg—dictating peace on a raft to the Czar of Russia, or contemplating defeat at the gallows of Leipsig—he was still the same military despot!

6. In this wonderful combination, his affectations of literature must not be omitted. The gaoler of the press, he affected the patronage of letters—the proscriber of books, he encouraged philosophy—the persecutor of authors and the murderer of printers, he yet pretended to the protection of learning! the assassin of Palm, the silencer of de Stüel, and the denouncer of Kotzebue, he was the friend of David, the benefactor of De Lille, and sent his academic prize to the philosopher of England.

7. Such a medley of contradictions, and at the same time such an individual consistency, were never united in the same character.—A royalist—a republican and an emperor—a Mohammedan—a catholic and a patron of the synagogue—a subaltern and a sovereign—a traitor and a tyrant—a Christian and an infidel—he was, through all his vicissitudes, the same stern, impatient, inflexible original—the same mysterious, incomprehensible self—the man without a model, and without a shadow.

QUESTIONS.—1. Of what country was Phillips, the author of this piece? 2. What was his profession? 3. Who was the subaltern of Corsica? 4. What is meant by banishing a Braganza, and espousing a Hapsburgh? 5. Who was de Stüel? 6. Kotzebue? 7. David? 8. De Lille?

ERRORS.—ex-tra-or-di-na-ry for ex-traor-di-na-ry; pat-riot for patriot; cap-ri-ces for ca-pri-ces (pronounced ca-preec-es); scep-tik-ism for skep-ti-cism; De Stale for De Stü-el (pronounced De Stah-el.)

SPELL AND DEFINE.—dynasty; 2. crescent, promulgate, parricidal, dædæm; 3. pantomime, development; 4. ubiquity, prodigies, synagogue.

LESSON XL.

RULE.—Pronounce the consonant sounds very distinctly.

EXAMPLE.—Prolong the consonant sounds that are italicised in the following words.—or-b, ai-d, a-ll, ar-m, ow-n, so-ng, wa-r, sa-ve, ama-z-e.

The Field of Waterloo.—LADY MORGAN.

1. It struck my imagination much, while standing on the last field fought by Bonaparte, that the battle of Waterloo should have been fought on a Sunday. What a different scene did the Scotch Grays and English Infantry present, from that which, at that very hour, was exhibited by their relatives, when over England and Scotland each church-bell had drawn together its worshipers! While many a mother's heart was sending up a prayer for her son's preservation, perhaps that son was gasping in agony. Yet, even at such a period, the lessons of his early days might give him consolation; and the maternal prayer might prepare the heart to support maternal anguish.

2. It is religion alone which is of universal application, both as a stimulant and a lenitive, throughout the varied heritage which falls to the lot of man. But we know that many thousands rushed into this fight, even of those who had been instructed in our religious principles, without leisure for one serious thought; and that some officers were killed in their ball dresses! They made the leap into the gulf which divides the two worlds—the present from the immutable state, without one parting prayer, or one note of preparation!

3. As I looked over this field, now green with growing grain, I could mark with my eye, the spots where the most desperate carnage had been. The bodies had been heaped together, and scarcely more than covered: and so enriched is the soil, that, in these spots, the grain never ripens. It grows rank and green to the end of harvest. This touching memorial, which endures when the thousand groans have expired, and when the stain of human blood has faded from the ground, still seems to cry to Heaven that there is awful guilt somewhere, and a terrific reckoning for those who caused destruction which the earth could not conceal. These hillocks of superabundant vegetation, as the wind rustled through the grain, seemed the most affecting monuments which nature could devise, and gave a melancholy animation to this plain of death.

4. When we attempt to measure the mass of suffering which was here inflicted, and to number the individuals that fell, considering each who suffered as our fellow-man, we are overwhelmed with the agonizing calculation, and retire from the field which has been the scene of our reflections, with the simple, concentrated feeling—these armies once lived, breathed and felt like us, and the time is at hand when we shall be like them.

QUESTIONS.—1. Between what powers was the battle of Waterloo fought? 2. On what day? 3. Who were the commanders in chief? 4. Which gained the battle? 5. How did Lady Morgan distinguish those spots where the most desperate carnage had been? 6. What feeling does the sight of the battle-field inspire?

ERRORS.—la-zure for lei-sure (pronounced le-zure); rus-sled for rust-ed; mes-ure for mea-sure; cac-u-la-tion for cal-cu-la-tion.

SELL AND DEFINE.—1. imagination, maternal, anguish; 2. immutable; 3. carnage, superabundant, vegetation; 4. agonizing.

LESSON XLI.

RULE.—When several consonants come together, give the full sound to each of them.

EXAMPLE.—Pronounce the following words, sounding fully the consonants that are italicised.—or-b'd, pro-b'd'st, trou-bl'd'st, trou-bles, trou-bi'st, ri-bs, rob-b'st, han-dl'd, fon-dl'st, brea-dths, lau-gh'st.

The Splendor of War.—CHALMERS.

1. The first great obstacle to the extinction of war, is, the way in which the heart of man is carried off from its barbarities and its horrors, by the splendor of its deceitful accompaniments. There is a feeling of the sublime in contemplating the shock of armies, just as there is in contemplating the devouring energy of a tempest; and this so elevates and engrosses the whole man, that his eye is blind to the tears of bereaved parents, and his ear is deaf to the piteous moan of the dying, and the shriek of their desolated families.

2. There is a gracefulness in the picture of a youthful warrior burning for distinction on the field, and lured by this generous aspiration to the deepest of the animated throng, where, in the fell work of death, the opposing sons of valor struggle for a remembrance and a name; and this side of the picture is so much the exclusive object of our regard, as to disguise from our view the mangled carcasses of the fallen, and the writhing agonies of the hundreds and the hundreds more who have been laid on the cold ground, and left to languish and to die.

3. There no eye pities them. No sister is there to weep over them. There no gentle hand is present to ease the dying posture, or bind up the wounds, which, in the maddening fury of the combat, had been given and received by the children of one common father. There death spreads its pale ensigns over every countenance, and when night comes on, and darkness gathers around them, how many a despairing wretch must take up with the bloody field as the untended bed of his last sufferings, without one friend to bear the message of tenderness to his distant home, without one companion to close his eyes.

4. I avow it. On every side of me I see causes at work, which go to spread a most delusive coloring over war, to remove its shocking barbarities to the back-ground of our contemplations altogether. I see it in the history which tells me of the superb appearance of the troops, and the brilliancy of their successive charges. I see it in the poetry which lends the magic of its numbers to the narrative of blood, and transports its many admirers, as, by its images, and its figures, and its nodding plumes of chivalry, it throws its treacherous embellishments over a scene of legalized slaughter.

5. I see it in the music which represents the progress of the battle; and where, after being inspired by the trumpet-notes of preparation, the whole beauty and tenderness of a drawing-room are seen to bend over the sentimental entertainment; nor do I hear the utterance of a single sigh to interrupt the death-tones of the thickening contest, and the moans of the wounded men as they fade away upon the ear, and sink into lifeless silence.

6. All, all goes to prove what strange and half-sighted creatures we are. Were it not so, war could never have been seen in any other aspect than that of unmingled hatefulness; and I can look to nothing but to the progress of Christian sentiment upon earth, to arrest the strong current of its popular and prevailing partiality for war.

7. Then only will an imperious sense of duty lay the check of severe principle, on all the subordinate tastes and faculties of our nature. Then will glory be reduced to its right estimate, and the wakeful benevolence of the gospel, chasing away every spell, will be devoted to simple but sublime enterprises for the good of the species.

QUESTIONS.—1. What are the causes of war? 2. Should all men endeavor to prevent war? 3. Why? 4. What is the first great obstacle to the extinction of war? 5. How do History, Poetry and Music tend to keep alive the spirit of war? 6. Will it be finally extinguished? 7. How do you know? 8. How will it be done?

ERRORS.—con'-tem-pla-tin' for con-tem'-pla-ting; pic-ter for pic-ture; wreeth-ing for wri-thing.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. obstacle, extinction, barbarities, accompaniments, contemplating, devouring, engrosses; 2. gracefulness, remembrance, carcasses, languish; 3. maddening, combat, untented; 4. back-ground, treacherous, embellishments, legalized; 5. sentimental thickening; 7. subordinate, benevolence, species.

LESSON XLII.

RULE.—Take care not to let the voice grow weaker and weaker as you approach the end of a sentence.

The Best of Classics.—GRIMKE.

1. There is a classic, the best the world has ever seen, the noblest that has ever honored and dignified the language of mortals. If we look into its antiquity, we discover a title to our veneration, unrivaled in the history of literature. If we have respect to its evidences, they are found in the testimony of miracle and prophecy; in the ministry of man, of nature and of angels, yea, even of "God, manifest in the flesh," of "God blessed forever."

2. If we consider its authenticity, no other pages have survived the lapse of time, that can be compared with it. If we examine its authority, for it speaks as never man spake, we discover, that it came from heaven, in vision and prophecy, under the sanction of Him, who is Creator of all things, and the Giver of every good and perfect gift.

3. If we reflect on its truths, they are lovely and spotless, sublime and holy, as God himself, unchangeable as his nature, durable as his righteous dominion, and versatile as the moral condition of mankind. If we regard the value of its treasures, we must estimate them, not like the relics of classic antiquity, by the perishable glory and beauty, virtue and happiness of this world, but by the enduring perfection and supreme felicity of an eternal kingdom.

4. If we inquire, who are the men, that have recorded its truths, vindicated its rights, and illustrated the excellence of its scheme? From the depth of ages and from the living world, from the populous continent and the isles of the sea—comes forth the answer—the patriarch and the prophet, the evangelist and the martyr.

5. If we look abroad through the world of men, the victims of folly or vice, the prey of cruelty, of injustice, and inquire what are its benefits, even in this temporal state, the great and the humble, the rich and the poor, the powerful and the weak, the learned and the ignorant reply, as with one voice, that humility and resignation, purity, order and peace, faith, hope and charity, are its blessings upon earth.

6. And if, raising our eyes from time to eternity, from the world of mortals to the world of just men made perfect, from the visible creation, marvelous, beautiful and glorious as it is, to the invisible creation of angels and seraphs, from the footstool of God, to the throne of God himself, we ask, what are the blessings that flow from this single volume, let the question be answered by the pen of the evangelist, the harp of the prophet, and the records of the book of life.

7. Such is the best of classics the world has ever admired; such, the noblest that man has ever adopted as a guide.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is the antiquity of the Bible? 2. Specify some of the reasons for considering the Bible the best of classics? 3. How does it differ from other classics of antiquity?

EXERCISES.—prof-fer-sy for proph-e-cy; cre-a-ter for cre-a-tor; e-tar-nal for e-ter-nal.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. classic, antiquity, testimony, literature; 2. authenticity, authority; 3. unchangeable, dominion, versatile; 4. illustrated, excellent, patriarch; 5. resignation; 6. marvelous, beautiful, evangelist.

LESSON XLIII.

RULE.—Pronounce the consonant sounds very distinctly.

EXAMPLE.—Prolong the consonant sounds that are italicised.—b-old, d-eign, f-ather, g-ather, j-oy, l-ight, m-an, n-o, g-ueer, p-r-ay, v-ale, w-oe, y-ours, z-one, h-ang.

The New Song.—BIBLE.

1. And they sang a new song, saying, "Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof:

2. For thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth."

3. And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne, and the beasts, and the elders; and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands, saying with a loud voice, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing."

4. And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, "Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb, for ever and ever."

QUESTIONS.—1. Where is the book of Revelation found? 2. Who wrote it? 3. What is the character and style of this extract? 4. Is it poetical? 5. Wherein? 6. Who is meant by the "Lamb," in verse 3? 7. In what does Christ resemble a lamb?

ERRORS.—kin-derd for kin-dred; arth and airth and yirth for earth; ann-gels for an-gels (pronounced ain-gels); beas for beasts; thou-san for thou-sand; say-in for say-ing; strenth for strength; cre-tur and crit-ter for crea-ture.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. worthy; redeemed, kindred; 2. elders, receive, thousand.

LESSON XLIV.

RULE.—Pronounce the vowels full, and give them the proper sound.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE.—Sound the following vowels long and full.—e-rr, a-ll, o-r, a-ge, e-dge, a-rr, a-t, o-ld, ou-r, ee-l, i-t, oo-ze, p-u-ll, b-oy, i-sle.

The Deluge.—BIBLE.

1. And the Lord said unto Noah, Come thou, and all thy house into the ark : for thee have I seen righteous before me in this generation. Of every clean beast thou shalt take to thee by sevens, the male and his female : and of beasts that are not clean by two, the male and his female.

2. Of fowls also of the air by sevens, the male and the female ; to keep seed alive upon the face of all the earth. For yet seven days, and I will cause it to rain upon the earth forty days and forty nights : and every living substance that I have made, will I destroy from off the face of the earth.

3. And Noah did according unto all that the Lord commanded him. And Noah was six hundred years old, when the flood of waters was upon the earth.

4. And Noah went in and his sons, and his wife, and his sons' wives with him, into the ark, because of the waters of the flood. Of clean beasts and of beasts that are not clean, and of fowls, and of every thing that creepeth upon the earth there went in two and two unto Noah into the ark, the male and the female, as God had commanded Noah. And it came to pass after seven days, that the waters of the flood were upon the earth.

5. In the sixth hundredth year of Noah's life, in the second month, the seventeenth day of the month, the same day, were all the fountains of the great deep broken up, and the windows of heaven were opened. And the rain was upon the earth forty days and forty nights.

6. In the self same day entered Noah, and Shem, and Ham, and Japheth, the sons of Noah ; and Noah's wife, and the three wives of his sons with them, into the ark : They, and every beast after his kind, and all the cattle after their kind, and every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth after his kind, and every fowl after his kind, every bird of every sort.

7. And they went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh, wherein is the breath of life. And they that went in, went in male and female, of all flesh, as God had commanded him. And the Lord shut him in.

8. And the flood was forty days upon the earth; and the waters increased, and bare up the ark, and it was lifted up above the earth. And the waters prevailed, and were increased greatly upon the earth: and the ark went upon the face of the waters. And the waters prevailed exceedingly upon the earth. And all the high hills that were under the whole heavens were covered.

9. Fifteen cubits upward did the waters prevail; and the mountains were covered. And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man. All in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land, died.

10. And every living substance was destroyed which was upon the face of the ground, both man, and cattle, and the creeping things, and the fowl of the heaven; And they were destroyed from the earth; and Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark. And the waters prevailed upon the earth an hundred and fifty days.

QUESTIONS.—From what part of the Bible is this lesson taken? 2. How long has it been since the flood? 3. Why did God send a flood on the earth? 4. Who were saved? 5. Why did God preserve Noah and his family? 6. What were preserved with them? 7. What is the distinction between clean and unclean beasts? 8. How many of each class entered the ark? 9. How old was Noah when the flood came? 10. How long did it continue? 11. How high did the waters rise? 12. What evidence is there in nature of there having been a flood? 13. What does this confirm?

ERRORS.—Noe-r for No-ah; in-ter for in-to; liv-in for liv-ing; kiv-er-ed for cov-er-ed; win-ders for win-dows; shet for shut; hun-derd for hun-dred.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. righteous; 2. substance; 5. fountains; 8. increased, prevailed, exceedingly; 9. cubits, nostrils; 10. destroyed, remained.

LESSON XLV.

RULE.—Avoid reading in a faint and low tone.

A Hebrew Tale.—MRS. SIGOURNEY.

1. Twilight was deepening with a tinge of eve,
As toward his home in Israel's sheltered vales
A stately Rabbi drew. His camels spied
Afar the palm-trees' lofty heads, that decked
5. The dear, domestic fountain,—and in speed
Pressed, with broad foot, the smooth and dewy glade.
The holy man his peaceful threshold passed
With hasting step. The evening meal was spread,
And she, who from life's morn his heart had shared,
10. Breathed her fond welcome. Bowing o'er the board,
The blessing of his fathers' God he sought;
Ruler of earth and sea. Then raising high
The sparkling wine-cup, "Call my sons," he bade,
"And let me bless them ere their hour of rest."
15. The observant mother spake with gentle voice
Somewhat of soft excuse,—that they were wont
To linger long amid the Prophet's school,
Learning the holy law their father loved.
—His sweet repast with sweet discourse was blent,
20. Of journeying and return. 'Wouldst thou hadst seen,
With me, the golden morning break to light
Yon mountain summits, whose blue, waving line
Scarce meets thine eye, where chirp of joyous birds,
And breath of fragrant shrubs, and spicy gales,
25. And sigh of waving boughs, stirred in the soul
Warm orisons. Yet most I wished thee near Amid the temple's pomp, when the high priest,
Clad in his robe pontifical, invoked
The God of Abraham, while from lute and harp,
30. Cymbal, and trump, and psaltery, and glad breath
Of tuneful Levite,—and the mighty shout
Of all our people like the swelling sea,
Loud hallelujahs burst. When next I seek Blest Zion's glorious hill, our beauteous boys
35. Must bear me company. Their early prayers
Will rise as incense. Thy reluctant love
No longer must withhold them:—the new toil
Will give them sweeter sleep,—and touch their cheek
With brighter crimson. Mid their raven curls
40. My hand I'll lay,—and dedicate them there,
Even in those hallowed courts, to Israel's God,
Two spotless lambs, well pleasing in his sight.
But yet, methinks, thou'rt paler grown, my love!—
And the pure sapphire of thine eye looks dim,
45. As though 'twere washed with tears.'

—Faintly she smiled,—

'One doubt, my lord, I fain would have thee solve

- Gems of rich luster and of countless cost
 Were to my keeping trusted. Now, alas!
 50 They are demanded. Must they be restored?
 Or may I not a little longer gaze
 Upon their dazzling hues?' His eye grew stern,
 And on his lip there lurked a sudden curl
 Of indignation.—'Doth my wife propose
 55. Such doubt?—as if a master might not claim
 His own again?'—'Nay, Rabbi, come, behold
 These priceless jewels ere I yield them back.'
 So to their spousal chamber with soft hand
 Her lord she led. There, on a snow-white couch,
 60. Lay his two sons, pale, pale and motionless,
 Like fair twin-lilies, which some grazing kid
 In wantonness had cropped. 'My sons!—my sons!—
 Light of my eyes!'—the astonished father cried,—
 'My teachers in the law!—whose guileless hearts
 65. And prompt obedience warned me oft to be More perfect with my God!'

- To earth he fell,
 Like Lebanon's rent cedar; while his breast
 Heaved with such groans as when the laboring soul
 70. Breaks from its clay companion's close embrace.
 The mourning mother turned away and wept,
 Till the first storm of passionate grief was still.
 Then, pressing to his ear her faded lip,
 She sighed in tone of tremulous tenderness,
 75. 'Thou didst instruct me, Rabbi, how to yield
 The summoned jewels—See! the Lord did give,
 The Lord hath taken away.'

- 'Yea!' said the sire,
 And blessed be his name. Even for thy sake
 80. Thrice blessed be Jehovah.' Long he pressed
 On those cold, beautiful brows his quivering lip,
 While from his eye the burning anguish rolled;
 Then, kneeling low, those chastened spirits poured
 Their mighty homage forth to God.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is a Rabbi? 2. What was the character of this Rabbi? 3. Where had he been journeying? 4. How do you know he had been at Jerusalem? 5. Where is Jerusalem? 6. How often did the Jews go up to Jerusalem for religious purposes? 7. What had happened during the Rabbi's absence? 8. What had been the character of his sons? 9. How did his wife prepare him to hear of their death? 10. What is the best support in time of trouble and affliction?

ERRORS.—hal-le-lu-jah for hal-le-lu-yah; hol-low-ed for hal-low-ed.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. twilight; 7. threshold; 15. observant; 26. orison; 28. pontifical; 30. cymbal, psalttery; 33. hallelujah; 34. beauteous; 36. incense, reluctant; 40. dedicate; 41. hallowed.

LESSON XLVI.

RULE.—Let each scholar in the class mention every syllable that is pronounced wrong, as each one reads.

External Appearance of England.

A. H. EVERETT.

1. Whatever may be the extent of the distress in England, or the difficulty of finding any remedies for it, which shall be at once practicable and sufficient, it is certain that the symptoms of decline have not displayed themselves on the surface; and no country in Europe, at the present day probably none that ever flourished at any preceding period of ancient or of modern times ever exhibited so strongly the outward marks of general industry, wealth and prosperity.

2. The misery that exists, whatever it may be, retires from public view; and the traveler sees no traces of it except in the beggars,—which are not more numerous than they are on the continent,—in the courts of justice, and in the newspapers. On the contrary, the impressions he receives from the objects that meet his view are almost uniformly agreeable.

3. He is pleased with the attention paid to his personal accommodation as a traveler, with the excellent roads, and the conveniences of the public carriages and inns. The country every where exhibits the appearance of high cultivation; or else of wild and picturesque beauty; and even the unimproved lands are disposed with taste and skill, so as to embellish the landscape very highly, if they do not contribute, as they might, to the substantial comfort of the people.

4. From every eminence, extensive parks and grounds, spreading far and wide over hill and vale, interspersed with dark woods, and variegated with bright waters, unroll themselves before the eye, like enchanting gardens. And while the elegant constructions of the modern proprietors fill the mind with images of ease and luxury, the mouldering ruins that remain of former ages, of the castles and churches of their feudal ancestors, increase the interest of the picture by contrast, and associate with it poetical and affecting recollections of other times and manners.

5. Every village seems to be the chosen residence of industry, and her handmaids, neatness and comfort ; and, in the various parts of the island, her operations present themselves under the most amusing and agreeable variety of forms. Sometimes her votaries are mounting to the skies in manufactories of innumerable stories in height, and sometimes diving in mines into the bowels of the earth, or dragging up drowned treasures from the bottom of the sea.

6. At one time the ornamented grounds of a wealthy prior seem to realize the fabled Elysium ; and, again, as you pass in the evening through some village engaged in the iron manufacture, where a thousand forges are feeding at once their dark-red fires, and clouding the air with their volumes of smoke, you might think yourself, for a moment, a little too near some drearier residence.

7. The aspect of the cities is as various as that of the country. Oxford, in the silent, solemn grandeur of its numerous collegiate palaces, with their massy stone walls and vast interior quadrangles, seems like the deserted capital of some departed race of giants. This is the splendid sepulcher, where science, like the Roman Tarpeia, lies buried under the weight of gold that rewarded her ancient services, and where copious libations of the richest Port and Madeira, are daily poured out to her memory.

8. At Liverpool, on the contrary, all is bustle, brick and business. Every thing breathes of modern times, every body is occupied with the concerns of the present moment excepting one elegant scholar, who unites a singular resemblance to the Roman face and dignified person of our Washington, with the magnificent spirit and intellectual accomplishments of his own Italian hero.

9. At every change in the landscape, you fall upon monuments of some new race of men, among the number that have in their turn inhabited these islands. The mysterious monument of Stonchedge, standing remote and alone upon a bare and boundless heath, as much unconnected with the events of past ages as it is with the uses of the present, carries you back, beyond all historical records, into the obscurity of a wholly unknown period.

10. Perhaps the Druids raised it ; but by what machinery could these half barbarians have wrought and moved such immense masses of rock ? By what fatality is it, that, in every part of the globe, the most durable impressions that have been made upon its surface were the work of races now entirely extinct ? Who were the builders of the pyramids, and the massy monuments of Egypt and India ?

11. Who constructed the Cyclopean walls of Italy and Greece, or elevated the innumerable and inexplicable mounds which are seen in every part of Europe, Asia, and America; or the ancient forts upon the Ohio, on whose ruins the third growth of trees is now more than four hundred years old? All these constructions have existed through the whole period within the memory of man, and will continue, when all the architecture of the present generation, with its high civilization and improved machinery, shall have crumbled into dust.

12. Stonehenge will remain unchanged, when the banks of the Thames shall be as bare as Salisbury heath. But the Romans had something of the spirit of these primitive builders, and they left every where distinct traces of their passage.

13. Half the castles in Great Britain were founded, according to tradition, by Julius Cæsar; and abundant vestiges remain, throughout the island, of their walls, and forts, and military roads. Most of their castles have, however, been built upon and augmented at a later period, and belong, with more propriety, to the brilliant period of Gothic architecture. Thus the keep of Warwick dates from the time of Cæsar, while the castle itself, with its lofty battlements, extensive walls, and large enclosures, bears witness to the age, when every Norman chief was a military despot within his own barony.

14. To this period appertains the principal part of the magnificent Gothic monuments, castles, cathedrals, abbeys, priories and churches, in various stages of preservation and of ruin: some, like Warwick and Alnwick castles, like Salisbury cathedral and Westminster abbey, in all their original perfection; others, like Kenilworth and Canterbury, little more than a rude mass of earth and rubbish; and others again in the intermediate stages of decay, borrowing a sort of charm from their very ruin, and putting on their dark-green robes of ivy to conceal the ravages of time, as if the luxuriant bounty of nature were purposely throwing a veil over the frailty and feebleness of art.

15. What a beautiful and brilliant vision was this Gothic architecture, shining out as it did from the deepest darkness of feudal barbarism! And here again, by what fatality has it happened that the moderns, with all their civilization and improved taste, have been as utterly unsuccessful in rivaling the divine simplicity of the Greeks, as the rude grandeur of the Cyclopeans and ancient Egyptians?

16. Since the revival of arts in Europe, the builders have confined themselves wholly to a graceless and unsuccessful imitation of ancient models. Strange, that the only new architectural conception of any value, subsequent to the time of Phidias, should have been struck out at the worst period of society that has since occurred!

17. Sometimes the moderns, in their laborious poverty of invention, heap up small materials in large masses, and think that St. Peter's or St. Paul's will be as much more sublime than the Parthenon, as they are larger; at others, they condescend to a servile imitation of the wild and native graces of the Gothic; as the Chinese, in their stupid ignorance of perspective, can still copy, line by line, and point by point, a European picture. But the Norman castles and churches, with all their richness and sublimity, fell with the power of their owners at the rise of the Commonwealth.

18. The Independents were levelers of substance as well as form; and the material traces they left of their existence are the ruins of what their predecessors had built. They too, had an architecture, but it was not in wood nor stone. It was enough for them to lay the foundation of the nobler fabric of civil liberty. The effects of the only change in society that has since occurred, are seen in the cultivated fields, the populous and thriving cities, the busy ports, and the general prosperous appearance of the country.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is the appearance of England, as to prosperity? 2. What is the appearance of things in respect to industry, neatness, &c.? 3. What is said of the cities? 4. Stonehenge? 5. How old is the "keep" and castle of Warwick? 6. Who were the Independents, and what did they do?

ERRORS.—surf-face for sur-face; ob-jics for ob-jects; va-ra-gat-ed for va-ri-e-gat-ed.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. symptoms, exhibited, prosperity; 2. uniformly; 3. accommodation, ceremonies, picturesque; 4. enchanted, interspersed, feudal, recollections; innumerable, manufactories; 6. ornamented, forges; 7. quadrangles; 8. intellectual, accomplishments; 9. Stonehenge; 13. architecture.

LESSON XLVII.

RULE.—In reading poetry that does not rhyme, there should not be any pause at the end of a line, terminating with an unimportant word, unless the sense requires it.

EXAMPLE.—Ye who have anxiously and fondly watched Beside a fading friend, unconscious that
The cheeks' bright crimson, lovely to the view,
Like nightshade, with unwholesome beauty bloomed.

In this example there must be a slight pause at the end of the first line, but none at all at the end of the second.

Vision of a Spirit.—BIBLE.

- Then Eliphaz the Temanite answered and said,
If we assay to commune with thee, wilt thou be grieved?
But who can withhold himself from speaking?
Behold! thou hast instructed many,
5. And thou hast strengthened the weak hands.
Thy words have upholden him that was falling,
And thou hast strengthened the feeble knees.
But now it is come upon thee, and thou faintest;
It toucheth thee, and thou art troubled.
10. Is not this thy fear, thy confidence,
Thy hope, and the uprightness of thy ways?
Remember, I pray thee, who ever perished, being innocent?
Or where were the righteous cut off?
Even as I have seen, they that plow iniquity,
15. And sow wickedness, reap the same.
By the blast of God they perish,
And by the breath of his nostrils are they consumed,
The roaring of the lion, and the voice of the fierce lion,
And the teeth of the young lions, are broken.
20. The old lion perisheth for lack of prey,
And the stout lion's whelps are scattered abroad.

- Now a thing was secretly brought to me,
And mine ear received a little thereof.
In thoughts from the visions of the night,
25. When deep sleep falleth on men,
Fear came upon me, and trembling,
Which made all my bones to shake.
Then a spirit passed before my face;
The hair of my flesh stood up:
30. It stood still, but I could not discern the form thereof:
An image was before mine eyes,
There was silence, and I heard a voice, saying,
Shall mortal man be more just than God?
Shall a man be more pure than his Maker?
35. Behold! he put no trust in his servants;
And his angels he charged with folly:
How much less in them that dwell in houses of clay,

- Whose foundation is the dust,
Which are crushed before the moth !
40. They are destroyed from morning to evening :
They perish for ever without any regarding it.
Doth not their excellency which is in them go away ?
They die even without wisdom.

QUESTIONS.—1. Who was Eliphaz ? 2. What is the amount of his argument against Job ? 3. He is proving that he must have committed some heinous crime—where does he prove it ?

ERRORS.—ex-len-cy and ex-ce-len-cy for ex-cel-len-cy ; im-ige for im-age.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. commune ; 4. instructed ; 5. strengthened ; 6. upholden ; 11. uprightness ; 15. wickedness ; 27. trembling ; 38. foundation ; 42. excellency.

LESSON XLVIII.

RULE.—Where two or more consonants come together, let the pupil be careful to scund every one distinctly.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE.

Thou shed'st a sunshine on his head.

The brown forests.

Hop'st thou for gifts like these ?

Or ever thou had'st formed the earth.

I have received presents.

Character of the Puritan Fathers of New England.—GREENWOOD.

1. One of the most prominent features which distinguished our forefathers was their determined resistance to oppression. They seemed born and brought up, for the high and special purpose of showing to the world, that the civil and religious rights of man, the rights of self-government, of conscience and independent thought, are not merely things to be talked of, and woven into theories, but to be adopted with the whole strength and ardor of the mind, and felt in the profoundest recesses of the heart, and carried out into the general life, and made the foundation of practical usefulness, and visible beauty, and true nobility.

2. Liberty, with them, was an object of too serious desire and stern resolve, to be personified, allegorized and enshrined. They made no goddess of it, as the ancients did ; they had no time nor inclination for such trifling ; they felt that liberty was the simple birthright of every human creature ; they called it so ; they claimed it as such ; they revered and held it fast as the unalienable gift of the Creator, which was not to be surrendered to power, nor sold for wages.

3. It was theirs, as men ; without it, they did not esteem themselves men ; more than any other privilege or possession, it was essential to their happiness, for it was essential to their original nature ; and therefore they preferred it above wealth, and ease, and country ; and, that they might enjoy and exercise it fully, they forsook houses, and lands, and kindred, their homes, their native soil, and their fathers' graves.

4. They left all these ; they left England, which, whatever it might have been called, was not to them a land of freedom ; they launched forth on the pathless ocean, the wide, fathomless ocean, soiled not by the earth beneath, and bounded, all round and above, only by heaven ; and it seemed to them like that better and sublimer freedom, which their country knew not, but of which they had the conception and image in their hearts ; and, after a toilsome and painful voyage, they came to a hard and wintry coast, unfruitful and desolate, but unguarded and boundless ; its calm silence interrupted not the ascent of their prayers ; it had no eyes to watch, no ears to hearken, no tongues to report of them ; here again there was an answer to their souls' desire, and they were satisfied, and gave thanks ; they saw that they were free, and the desert smiled.

5. I am telling an old tale ; but it is one which must be told, when we speak of those men. It is to be added, that they transmitted their principles to their children, and that, peopled by such a race, our country was always free. So long as its inhabitants were unmolested by the mother country in the exercise of their important rights, they submitted to the form of English government ; but when those rights were invaded, they spurned even the form away.

6. This act was the revolution, which came of course, and spontaneously, and had nothing in it of the wonderful or unforeseen. The wonder would have been, if it had not occurred. It was indeed a happy and glorious event, but by no means unnatural ; and I intend no slight to the revered actors in the revolution, when I assert, that their fathers before them were as free as they—every whit as free.

7. The principles of the revolution were not the suddenly acquired property of a few bosoms ; they were abroad in the land in the ages before ; they had always been taught, like the truths of the Bible ; they had descended from father to son, down from those primitive days, when the pilgrim, established in his simple dwelling, and seated at his blazing fire, piled high from the forest which shaded his door, repeated to his listening children the story of his wrongs and his resistance, and bade them rejoice, though the wild winds and the wild beasts were howling without, that they had nothing to fear from great men's oppression and the bishop's rage.

8. Here were the beginnings of the revolution. Every settler's hearth was a school of independence; the scholars were apt, and the lessons sunk deeply; and thus it came that our country was always free; it could not be other than free.

9. As deeply seated as was the principle of liberty and resistance to arbitrary power, in the breasts of the Puritans, it was not more so than their piety and sense of religious obligation. They were emphatically a people, whose God was the Lord. Their form of government was as strictly theocratical, if direct communication be excepted, as was that of the Jews; insomuch that it would be difficult to say, where there was any civil authority among them entirely distinct from ecclesiastical jurisdiction.

10. Whenever a few of them settled a town, they immediately gathered themselves into a church; and their elders were magistrates, and their code of laws was the Pentateuch. These were forms, it is true, but forms which faithfully indicated principles and feelings: for no people could have adopted such forms, who were not thoroughly imbued with the spirit, and bent on the practice, of religion.

11. God was their King; and they regarded him as truly and literally so, as if he had dwelt in a visible palace in the midst of their state. They were his devoted, resolute, humble subjects; they undertook nothing which they did not beg of him to prosper: they accomplished nothing without rendering to him the praise; they suffered nothing without carrying up their sorrows to his throne; they ate nothing which they did not implore him to bless.

12. Their piety was not merely external; it was sincere; it had the proof of a good tree, in bearing good fruit; it produced and sustained a strict morality. Their tenacious purity of manners and speech obtained for them, in the mother country, their name of Puritans, which though given in derision, was as honorable an appellation as was ever bestowed by man on man.

13. That there were hypocrites among them, is not to be doubted; but they were rare; the men who voluntarily exiled themselves to an unknown coast, and endured there every toil and hardship for conscience' sake, and that they might serve God in their own manner, were not likely to set conscience at defiance, and make the services of God a mockery; they were not likely to be, neither were they, hypocrites. I do not know that it would be arrogating too much for them to say, that on the extended surface of the globe, there was not a single community of men to be compared with them, in the respects of deep religious impressions, and an exact performance of moral duty.

QUESTIONS.—1. What was one of the prominent traits of character of our forefathers? 2. How did they regard liberty? 3. What was their conduct in support of liberty? 4. Why was the revolution a perfectly natural event—or just what might have been expected? 5. From whence were derived the principles of the revolution? 6. How were their systems of government formed? 7. What was the character of their piety? 8. As a community, how will they bear comparison for moral worth, with all other communities past or present?

ERRORS.—fe-ters for fea-tures; lib-ut-ty for lib-er-ty; 'steem for es-teem; civ-ile for civ-il.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. prominent, distinguished, determined, self-government; 2. personified, allegorized, enshrined, birthright, unalienable, surrendered; 3. essential; 4. fathomless; 5. transmitted, unmolested; 6. spontaneously; 8. independence; 9. communication, ecclesiastical, jurisdiction, theocratical; 10. immediately, magistrates, pentateuch; 12. honorable; 13. hypocrites.

LESSON XLIX.

RULE.—When two or more consonants come together, be careful to sound every one distinctly.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE.

Thou wast'st the flying ships.

Thou acknowledgests thy crime.

Thou list'nest to my tale.

It exists somewhere.

Thou knewest that I was a hard man.

1. What I would especially inculcate is, that, estimating as impartially as we are able, the virtues and defects of our forefathers' character, we should endeavor to imitate the first, and avoid the last.

2. Were they tenderly jealous of their inborn rights, and resolved to maintain them, in spite of the oppressor? And shall we ever be insensible to their value, and part with the vigilance which should watch, and the courage which should defend them? Rather let the ashes of our fathers, which have been cold so long, warm and quicken in their graves, and return imbodyed to the surface, and drive away their degenerate sons from the soil which their toils and sufferings purchased!

3. Rather let the beasts of the wilderness come back to a wilderness, and couch for prey in our desolate gardens, and bring forth their young in our marts, and howl nightly to the moon, amidst the grass-grown ruins of our prostrate cities! Rather let the red sons of the forest reclaim their pleasant hunting grounds, and rekindle their council fires which once threw their glare upon the eastern water, and roam over our hills and plains, without crossing a single track of the white man!

4. I am no advocate for war. I abominate its spirit and its cruelties. But to me there appears a wide and essential difference between resistance and aggression. It is aggression, it is the love of arbitrary domination, it is the insane thirst for what the world has too long and too indiscriminately called glory, which lights up the flames of war and devastation.

5. Without aggression on the one side, no resistance would be roused on the other, and there would be no war. And if all aggression was met by determined resistance, then, too, there would be no war; for the spirit of aggression would be humbled and repressed. I would that it might be the universal principle of our countrymen, and the determination of our rulers, never to offer the slightest injury, never to commit the least outrage, though it were to obtain territory, or fame, or any selfish advantage.

6. In this respect I would that the example which was sometimes set by our forefathers, might be altogether forsaken. But let us never forsake their better example of stern resistance; let us cherish and perpetuate their lofty sentiments of freedom; let us tread the soil which they planted for us as free as they did, or lie down at once beside them.

"The land we from our fathers had in trust
We to our children will transmit, or die.
This is our maxim, this our piety,
And God and nature say that it is just.

That which we would perform in arms, we must !
We read the dictate in the infant's eye,
In the wife's smile, and in the placid sky,
And at our feet, amid the silent dust
Of them that were before us."

7. Our fathers were pious,—eminently so. Let us then forever venerate and imitate this part of their character. When the children of the pilgrims forget that Being, who was the pilgrim's Guide and Deliverer; when the descendants of the Puritans cease to acknowledge, and to obey, and love that Being, for whose service the Puritans forsook all that men chiefly love, enduring scorn and reproach, exile and poverty, and finding at last a superabundant reward; when the sons of a religious and holy ancestry fall away from its high communion, and join themselves to the assemblies of the profane;—they have stained the luster of their parentage; they have forfeited the dear blessings of their inheritance; and they deserve to be cast out from this fair land without even a wilderness for their refuge. No ! Let us still keep the ark of God in the midst of us; let us adopt the prayer of the wise monarch of Israel,—“The Lord our God be with us, as he was with our fathers: let him not leave us, nor forsake us; that he may incline our hearts unto him, to walk in all his ways, and to keep his commandments, and his statutes, and his judgments, which he commanded our fathers.”

8. But our fathers were too rigidly austere. It may be thought, that, even granting this to be their fault, we are so rapidly advancing toward an opposite extreme, that any thing like a caution against it is out of season and superfluous. And yet I see not why the notice of every fault should not be accompanied with a corresponding caution.

9. That we are in danger of falling into one excess, is a reason why we should be most anxiously on our guard at the place of exposure; but it is no reason why another excess should not be reprobated, and pointed out with the finger of warning. The difficulty is, and the desire and effort should be, between these, as well as all other extremes, to steer an equal course, and preserve a safe medium.

10. I acknowledge that luxury, and the blandishments of prosperity and wealth, are greatly to be feared; and if our softnesses, and indulgences, and foreign fashions, must inevitably accomplish our seduction, and lead us away from the simplicity, honesty, sobriety, purity, and manly independence of our forefathers, most readily and fervently would

I exclaim, Welcome back to the pure old times of the Puritans! welcome back to the strict observances of their strictest days! welcome, thrice welcome, to all their severity, all their gloom! for infinitely better would be hard doctrines and dark brows, Jewish Sabbaths, strait garments, formal manners, and a harsh guardianship, than dissoluteness and effeminacy; than empty pleasures and shameless debauchery; than lolling ease, and pampered pride, and fluttering vanity; than unprincipled, faithless, corrupted rulers, and a people unworthy of a more exalted government.

11. But is it necessary that we must be either gloomy or corrupt, either formal or profane, either extravagant in strictness, or extravagant in dissipation and levity? Can we not so order our habits, and so fix our principles, as not to suffer the luxuries of our days to choke, and strangle, with their rankness, the simple morality of our fathers' days, nor permit a reverence for their stiff and inappropriate formalities and austerities to overshadow and repress our innocent comforts and delights?

12. Let us attempt, at least, to maintain ourselves in so desirable a medium. Let us endeavor to preserve whatever was excellent in the manners and lives of the Puritans, while we forsake what was inconsistent or unreasonable; and then we shall hardly fail to be wiser and happier, and even better, than they were.

QUESTIONS.—1. What should be especially inculcated in regard to the virtues and the defects of our forefathers' character? 2. How ought we to regard our rights? 3. Is this a spirit of war? 4. Did our fathers never fail in this respect? 5. How shall we regard their piety? 6. What shall we say of their austere and rigid severity? 7. What course ought we to pursue?

ERRORS.—lux-er-ies for lux-u-ries; in-sen-sub-ble for in-sen-si-ble; rep-rub-ba-ted for rep-ro-ba-ted.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. inculcate; 2. degenerate; 4. abominate, aggression, indiscriminately; 5. countrymen; 7. superabundant; 8. superfluous; 9. reprobated; 10. indulgences, inevitably, accomplish, guardianship, debauchery, unprincipled; 11. extravagant, inappropriate; 12. endeavor, excellent.

LESSON L.

RULE.—Be careful to speak such little words as the, of, a, in, from, at, by, very distinctly, and yet not to dwell on them so long as on other more important words.

Decisive Integrity.—WIRT.

1. The man who is so conscious of the rectitude of his intentions, as to be willing to open his bosom to the inspection of the world, is in possession of one of the strongest pillars of a decided character. The course of such a man will be firm and steady, because he has nothing to fear from the world, and is sure of the approbation and support of heaven. While he, who is conscious of secret and dark designs which, if known, would blast him, is perpetually shrinking and dodging from public observation, and is afraid of all around, and much more of all above him.

2. Such a man may, indeed pursue his iniquitous plans, steadily; he may waste himself to a skeleton in the guilty pursuit; but it is impossible that he can pursue them with the same health-inspiring confidence, and exulting alacrity, with him who feels, at every step, that he is in the pursuit of honest ends, by honest means. The clear unclouded brow, the open countenance, the brilliant eye which can look an honest man steadfastly, yet courteously in the face, the healthfully beating heart, and the firm elastic step, belong to him whose bosom is free from guile, and who knows that all his motives and purposes are pure and right.

3. Why should such a man falter in his course? He may be slandered; he may be deserted by the world; but he has that within which will keep him erect, and enable him to move onward in his course, with his eyes fixed on heaven, which he knows will not desert him.

4. Let your first step, then, in that discipline which is to give you decision of character, be the heroic determination to be honest men, and to preserve this character through every vicissitude of fortune, and in every relation which connects you with society. I do not use this phrase, "honest men," in the narrow sense merely of meeting your pecuniary engagements, and paying your debts; for this the common pride of gentlemen will constrain you to do.

5. I use it in its larger sense of discharging all your duties, both public and private, both open and secret, with the most scrupulous, heaven-attesting integrity; in that sense, farther, which drives from the bosom all little, dark, crooked, sordid, debasing considerations of self, and substitutes in their place a bolder, loftier, and nobler spirit; one that will dispose you to consider yourselves as born, not so much for yourselves, as for your country, and your fellow-creatures, and which will lead you to act on every occasion sincerely, justly, generously, magnanimously.

6. There is a morality on a larger scale, perfectly consistent with a just attention to your own affairs, which it would be the height of folly to neglect: a generous expansion, a proud elevation and conscious greatness of character, which is the best preparation for a decided course, in every situation into which you can be thrown; and it is to this high and noble tone of character that I would have you to aspire.

7. I would not have you to resemble those weak and meager streamlets, which lose their direction at every petty impediment that presents itself, and stop, and turn back, and creep around, and search out every little channel through which they may wind their feeble and sickly course. Nor yet would I have you resemble the headlong torrent that carries havoc in its mad career.

8. But I would have you like the ocean, that noblest emblem of majestic decision, which, in the calmest hour, still heaves its resistless might of waters to the shore, filling the heavens, day and night, with the echoes of its sublime declaration of independence, and tossing and sporting, on its bed, with an imperial consciousness of strength that laughs at opposition. It is this depth, and weight, and power, and purity of character, that I would have you to resemble; and I would have you, like the waters of the ocean, to become the purer by your own action.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is the effect of conscious rectitude upon a man? 2. The effect of the want of it? 3. What then should be the first step in the attainment of decision of character? 4. In what two senses may we be considered “honest men?” 5. With what beautiful metaphorical comparison does this piece terminate?

ERRORS.—stid-dy for stead-y; per-pech-u-al-ly for per-pet-u-al-ly; dis-ci-plyne for dis-ci-pline; sub-stutes for sub-sti-tutes; per-fc-ly for per-fect-ly.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. rectitude, approbation, perpetually, shrinking, observation; 2. iniquitous, health, inspiring, countenance, courteously; 3. discipline, determination; 4. vicissitude, pecuniary, engagements; 5. scrupulous, heaven-attesting, considerations, magnanimously;
6. consistent; 7. streamlets, impediment; 8. independence, conscia-ness.

LESSON LI.

RULE.—When any thing very solemn or devotional is to be read, there should be a full, solemn tone of voice, the piece should be read slowly, and long pauses should be made at the commas.

On the Being of a God.—YOUNG.

1. Retire; the world shut out; thy thoughts call home :
Imagination's airy wing repress;
Lock up thy senses; let no passion stir;
Wake all to reason: let her reign alone;
5. Then in thy soul's deep silence, and the depth
Of nature's silence, midnight, thus inquire,
As I have done; and shall inquire no more.
In nature's channel thus the questions run.
What am I? and from whence? I nothing know,
10. But that I am; and since I am, conclude
Something eternal: had there e'er been nought,
Nought still had been: eternal there must be.
But what eternal? Why not human race?
And Adam's ancestors without an end?
15. That's hard to be conceived; since every link
Of that long chained succession is so frail;
Can every part depend, and not the whole?
Yet grant it true; new difficulties rise;
I'm still quite out at sea: nor see the shore.
20. Whence earth, and these bright orbs? Eternal too?
Grant matter was eternal; still these orbs
Would want some other father; much design
Is seen in all their motions, all their makes;
Design implies intelligence and art
25. That can't be from themselves or man; that art
Man scarce can comprehend, could man bestow;
And nothing greater yet allow'd than man.
Who, motion, foreign to the smallest grain,
Shot through vast masses of enormous weight?
30. Who bid brute matter's restive lump assume Such various forms, and gave it wings to fly?
Has matter innate motion? then each atom,
Asserting its indisputable right
To dance, would form an universe of dust;
35. Has matter none? Then whence those glorious forms
And boundless flights, from shapeless and reposed?
Has matter more than motion? has it thought,
Judgment and genius? Is it deeply learned
In mathematics? Has it framed such laws,
40. Which but to guess, a Newton made immortal?
If so, how each sage atom laughs at me,
Who think a clod inferior to a man!
If art to form; and counsel to conduct;
Resides not in each block; a Godhead reigns.

45. Grant then invisible eternal mind ;
That granted, all is solved ; but granting that Draw I not o'er me a still darker cloud ?
Grant I not that which I can ne'er conceive ?
A Being without origin or end !
50. Hail human liberty ! there is no God !
Yet why on either scheme that knot subsists ;
Subsist it must, in God, or human race :
If in the last, how many knots beside,
Indissoluble all ? Why choose it there,
55. Where chosen still subsist ten thousand more ?
Reject it, where that chosen all the rest
Dispersed leave reason's whole horizon clear ?
This is not reason's dictate, reason says
Choose with the side where one grain turns the scale ;
60. What vast preponderance is here : can reason
With louder voice exclaim Believe a God ?
And reason heard is the sole mark of man.
What things impossible must man think true,
On any other system ! and how strange
65. To disbelieve through mere credulity ?"
If in this chain Lorenzo finds no flaw,
Let it forever bind him to belief.
And where the link in which a flaw he finds ?
And if a God there is, that God how great !

QUESTIONS.—1. What question is discussed in this piece ?—2. What inquiry is proposed in lines 9–15 ? 3. How is that inquiry answered in lines 15–18 ? 4. Suppose matter to be eternal, or without beginning, what is still the evidence of a designing God ? 5. What is meant by the question, "Has matter innate motion ?" 6. What would follow from such a supposition ? 33–34. 7. Can you state the conclusion of the argument ?

ERRORS.—thar for there ; in-til-li-gence for in-tel-li-gence ; in-dis-pu-tub-ble for in-dis-pu-ta-ble ; pre-pon-der-unce for pre-pen-der-ance ; lib-i-ty for lib-er-ty ; math-a-mat-ics for math-e-mat-ics.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. retire ; 2. imagination, repress ; 10. conclude ; 11. eternal ; 16. succession ; 22. design ; 24. intelligence ; 26. comprehend ; 27. allowed ; 28. foreign ; 29. enormous ; 30. restive ; 32. innate ; 33. asserting, indisputable ; 34. universe ; 36. reposed ; 38. judgment ; 39. mathematics ; 42. inferior ; 51. subsists ; 54. indissoluble ; 57. dispersed ; 58. dictate ; 60. preponderance ; 65. disbelieve, credulity.

LESSON LII.

RULE.—Be careful not to join the last part of one word to the beginning of the next word.

The Steam Boat on Trial.—ABBOTT.

1. The Bible every where conveys the idea that this life is not our home, but a state of probation, that is, of trial and discipline, which is intended to prepare us for another. In order that all, even the youngest of my readers, may understand what is meant by this, I shall illustrate it by some familiar examples, drawn from the actual business of life.

2. When a large steamboat is built, with the intention of having her employed upon the waters of a great river, she must be proved before put to service. Before trial, it is somewhat doubtful whether she will succeed. In the first place, it is not absolutely certain whether her machinery will work at all. There may be some flaw in the iron, or an imperfection in some part of the workmanship, which will prevent the motion of her wheels. Or if this is not the case, the power of the machinery may not be sufficient to propel her through the water, with such force as to overcome the current; or she may, when brought to encounter the rapids at some narrow passage in the stream, not be able to force her way against their resistance.

3. The engineer, therefore, resolves to try her in all these respects, that her security and her power may be properly proved before she is intrusted with her valuable cargo of human lives. He cautiously builds a fire under her boiler; he watches with eager interest the rising of the steam-gage, and scrutinizes every part of the machinery, as it gradually comes under the control of the tremendous power, which he is apprehensively applying.

4. With what interest does he observe the first stroke of the ponderous piston!—and when, at length, the fastenings of the boat are let go, and the motion is communicated to the wheels, and the mighty mass slowly moves away from the wharf, how deep and eager an interest does he feel in all her movements, and in every indication he can discover of her future success!

5. The engine, however, works imperfectly, as every one must on its first trial; and the object in this experiment is not to gratify idle curiosity, by seeing that she will move, but to discover and remedy every little imperfection, and to remove every obstacle which prevents more entire success. For this purpose, you will see our engineer examining, most minutely and most attentively, every part of her complicated machinery. The crowd on the wharf may be simply gazing on her majestic progress, as she moves off from the shore, but the engineer is within, looking with faithful examination into all the minutiae of the motion.

6. He scrutinizes the action of every lever and the friction of every joint; here he oils a bearing, there he tightens a nut; one part of the machinery has too much play, and he confines it—another too much friction, and he loosens it; now he stops the engine, now reverses her motion, and again sends the boat forward in her course. He discovers, perhaps, some great improvement of which she is susceptible, and when he returns to the wharf and has extinguished her fire, he orders from the machine-shop the necessary alteration.

7. The next day he puts his boat to the trial again, and she glides over the water more smoothly and swiftly than before. The jar which he had noticed is gone, and the friction reduced; the beams play more smoothly, and the alteration which he has made produces a more equable motion in the shaft, or gives greater effect to the stroke of the paddles upon the water.

8. When at length her motion is such as to satisfy him, upon the smooth surface of the river, he turns her course, we will imagine, toward the rapids, to see how she will sustain a greater trial. As he increases her steam, to give her power to overcome the new force with which she has to contend, he watches, with eager interest, her boiler, inspects the gage and the safety-valves, and, from her movements under the increased pressure of her steam, he receives suggestions for further improvements, or for precautions which will insure greater safety.

9. These he executes, and thus he perhaps goes on for many days, or even weeks, trying and examining, for the purpose of improvement, every working of that mighty power, to which he knows hundreds of lives are soon to be intrusted. This now is probation—trial for the sake of improvement. And what are its results? Why, after this course has been thoroughly and faithfully pursued, this floating palace receives upon her broad deck, and in her carpeted and curtained cabins, her four or five hundred passengers, who pour along, in one long procession of happy groups, over the bridge of planks;—father and son—mother and children—young husband and wife—all with implicit confidence, trusting themselves and their dearest interests to her power.

10. See her as she sails away—how beautiful and yet how powerful are all her motions! That beam glides up and down gently and smoothly in its grooves, and yet gentle as it seems, hundreds of horses could not hold it still; there is no apparent violence, but every movement is with irresistible power. How graceful is her form, and yet how mighty is the momentum with which she presses on her way.

11. Loaded with life, and herself the very symbol of life and power, she seems something ethereal—unreal, which, ere we look again, will have vanished away. And though she has within her bosom a furnace glowing with furious fires, and a reservoir of death—the elements of most dreadful ruin and conflagration—of destruction the most complete, and agony the most unutterable; and though her strength is equal to the united energy of two thousand men, she restrains it all.

12. She was constructed by genius, and has been tried and improved by fidelity and skill; and one man governs and controls her, stops her and sets her in motion, turns her this way and that, as easily and certainly as the child guides the gentle lamb. She walks over the hundred and sixty miles of her route without rest and without fatigue; and the passengers, who have slept in safety in their berths, with destruction by water without, and by fire within, defended only by a plank from the one, and by a sheet of copper from the other, land at the appointed time in safety.

13. My reader, you have within you susceptibilities and powers, of which you have little present conception, energies, which are hereafter to operate in producing fullness of enjoyment or horrors of suffering, of which you now can form scarcely a conjecture. You are now on trial. God wishes you to prepare yourself for safe and happy action. He wishes you to look within, to examine the complicated movements of your hearts to detect what is wrong, to modify what needs change and to rectify every irregular motion.

14. You go out to try your moral powers upon the stream of active life, and then return to retirement, to improve what is right and remedy what is wrong. Renewed opportunities of moral practice are given you, that you may go on from strength to strength, until every part of that complicated moral machinery, of which the human heart consists, will work as it ought to work, and is prepared to accomplish the mighty purposes for which your powers are designed. You are on trial—on probation now. You will enter upon active service in another world.

QUESTIONS.—1. How does the Bible consider this life? 2. What is a state of probation? 3. What is a steam boat? 4. Who invented it? 5. Was Robert Fulton an American? 6. What is meant by proving a steam boat? 7. What is the use of doing it? 8. Is there any resemblance between man and a steam boat? 9. If this life is our state of probation, what will a future state of existence be? 10. What difference is there between man's probation before the "fall" and man's probation now?

ERRORS.—des-cip-line for dis-ci-pline; sar-vice for ser-vice; bi-ler for boil-er; some-at for some-what; sar-tin and cer-ting for cer-tain; nar-rer for nar-row; tre-men-du-ous and tre-men-di-ous for tre-men-dous; in-jine for en-gine; ur-reg-u-lar for ir-reg-u-lar; hun-dred for hun-dred.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. conveys, probation, discipline, illustrate; 2. machinery, imperfection, workmanship, sufficient; 3. engineer, cautiously, steam-gage, scrutinizes, apprehensively; 4. ponderous, piston; 5. obstacle, minutely, complicated, minutiae; 6. friction, lever, reverses, bearing, alteration; 7. equable; 8. safety-valve, pressure; 9. implicit; 10. momentum; 11. ethereal, reservoir, conflagration, unutterable; 12. constructed, fatigue; 13. susceptibilities, conception, conjecture, modify, rectify; 14. renewed.

LESSON LIII.

RULE.—Stop at each comma long enough to take breath.

Paine's Age of Reason.—ERSKINE.

1. It seems, gentlemen, this is an age of reason, and the time and the person are at last arrived, that are to dissipate the errors that have overspread the past generations of ignorance! The believers in Christianity are many, but it belongs to the few that are wise to correct their credulity! Belief is an act of reason; and superior reason may therefore dictate to the weak. In running the mind along the numerous list of sincere and devout Christians, I cannot help lamenting that Newton had not lived to this day, to have had his shallowness filled up with this new flood of light! But the subject is too awful for irony. I will speak plainly.

2. Newton was a Christian! Newton whose mind burst forth from the fetters cast by nature upon our finite conceptions ; Newton whose science was truth, and the foundation of whose knowledge of it was philosophy. Not those visionary and arrogant assumptions which too often usurp its name, but philosophy resting upon the basis of mathematics, which, like figures, cannot lie. Newton who carried the line and rule to the utmost barriers of creation, and explored the principles by which, no doubt, all created matter is held together and exists.

3. But this extraordinary man, in the mighty reach of his mind, overlooked, perhaps, the errors which a minuter investigation of the created things on this earth might have taught him, of the essence of his Creator. What shall then be said of the great Mr. Boyle, who looked into the organic structure of all matter, even to the brute inanimate substances which the foot treads on. Such a man may be supposed to have been equally qualified with Mr. Paine, to "look through nature up to nature's God."

4. Yet the result of all his contemplation was the most confirmed and devout belief in all which the other holds in contempt as despicable and driveling superstition. But this error might, perhaps, arise from a want of due attention to the foundations of human judgment, and the structure of that understanding which God has given us for the investigation of truth.

5. Let that question be answered by Mr. Locke, who was to the highest pitch of devotion and adoration, a Christian. Mr. Locke, whose office was to detect the errors of thinking, by going up to the fountain of thought, and to direct into the proper track of reasoning the devious mind of man, by showing him its whole process, from the first perceptions of sense, to the last conclusions of ratiocination ; putting a rein besides upon false opinion, by practical rules for the conduct of human judgment.

6. But these men were only deep thinkers, and lived in their closet, unaccustomed to the traffic of the world, and to the laws which partially regulate mankind. Gentlemen, in the place where you now sit to administer the justice of this great country, above a century ago the never-to-be-forgotten Sir Matthew Hale presided, whose faith in Christianity is an exalted commentary upon its truth and reason, and whose life was a glorious example of its fruits in man ; administering human justice with a wisdom and purity drawn from the pure fountain of the Christian dispensation, which has been, and will be, in all ages, a subject of the highest reverence and admiration. But it is said by Mr. Paine, that the Christian fable is but the tale of the more ancient supersutions of the world, and may be easily detected by a proper understanding of the mythologies of the heathen.

7. Did Milton understand those mythologies? Was he less versed than Mr. Paine in the superstitions of the world? No: they were the subject of his immortal song; and though shut out from all recurrence to them, he poured them forth from the stores of a memory rich with all that man ever knew, and laid them in their order as the illustration of that real and exalted faith, the unquestionable source of that fervid genius, which cast a sort of shade upon all the other works of man.

“He passed the bounds of flaming space
Where angels tremble while they gaze;
He saw, till blasted with excess of light,
He closed his eyes in endless night.”

8. But it was the light of the body only that was extinguished; “the celestial light shone inward, and enabled him to justify the ways of God to man.”

9. Thus, gentlemen, you find all that is great or wise, or splendid, or illustrious, among created beings, all the minds gifted beyond ordinary nature, if not inspired by their Universal Author for the advancement and dignity of the world, though divided by distant ages, and by the clashing opinions which distinguish them from one another, yet joining, as it were, in one sublime chorus to celebrate the truths of Christianity, and laying upon its holy altars the never-fading offerings of their immortal wisdom.

QUESTIONS.—1. Who and what was Paine? 2. What is said of Newton? 3. What of Boyle? 4. What of Locke? 5. These men, it might be said, were only great thinkers, unacquainted with practical life—Who is next brought forward to meet this? 6. What is Paine’s argument in respect to the Bible and heathen mythology? 7. How is it met? 8. What is the amount of the argument for Christianity, deduced from the consideration of such individual cases?

ERRORS.—b’lief for be-lief; shal-ler-ness for shal-low-ness; i-er-ny for i-ro-ny; ex-is’s for ex-ists.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. dissipate, overspread, credulity, shallowness; 2. conceptions, philosophy, assumptions, mathematics, barriers; 3. extraordinary, investigation, organic; 4. contemplation, driveling, superstition; 5. adoration, conclusions, ratiocination, judgment; 6. unaccustomed, commentary, administering, dispensation, mythologies; 7. recurrence, unquestionable; 8. extinguished; 9. illustrious.

LESSON LIV.

RULE.—In reading poetry that does not rhyme, there should be no pause at the end of a line, except when it terminates with an unimportant word, or the sense requires it.

Divine Providence.—BIBLE.

1. Call now, if there be any that will answer thee;
And to which of the saints wilt thou turn?
For wrath killeth the foolish man,
And envy slayeth the silly one.
I have seen the foolish taking root:
But suddenly I cursed his habitation.
His children are far from safety,
And they are crushed in the gate,
Neither is there any to deliver them..
Whose harvest the hungry eateth up
And taketh it even out of the thorns,
And the robber swalloweth up their substance.
Although affliction cometh not forth of the dust,
Neither doth trouble spring out of the ground:
Yet man is born unto trouble,
As the sparks fly upward.
2. I would seek unto God,
And unto God would I commit my cause:
Who doeth great things and unsearchable;
Marvelous things without number:
Who giveth rain upon the earth,
And sendeth waters upon the fields:
To set up on high those that be low;
That those which mourn may be exalted to safety.
He disappointeth the devices of the crafty,
So that their hands cannot perform their enterprise.
He taketh the wise in their own craftiness:
And the council of the froward is carried headlong.
They meet with darkness in the day-time,
And grope in the noon-day as in the night.
But he saveth the poor from the sword,
From their mouth, and from the hand of the mighty.
So the poor hath hope,
And iniquity stoppeth her mouth.
3. Behold! happy is the man whom God correcteth:
Therefore despise not thou the chastening of the Almighty.
For he maketh sore, and bindeth up:
He woundeth, and his hands make whole.
He shall deliver thee in six troubles:
Yea, in seven there shall no evil touch thee.
In famine he shall redeem thee from death:

And in war from the power of the sword.
 Thou shalt be hid from the scourge of the tongue :
 Neither shalt thou be afraid of destruction when it cometh.
 At destruction and famine thou shalt laugh :
 Neither shalt thou be afraid of the beasts of the earth.
 For thou shalt be in league with the stones of the field :
 And the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee.
 And thou shalt know that thy tabernacle shall be in peace :
 And thou shalt visit thy habitation, and shalt not sin.
 Thou shalt know also that thy seed shall be great,
 And thine offspring as the grass of the earth.
 Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age,
 Like as a shock of corn cometh in, in his season.
 Lo ! this, we have searched it, so it is ;
 Hear it, and know thou it for thy good.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is the destiny of the unrighteous ? 2. What advice does Eliphaz give to Job ? 3. What is the proper effect of divine chastisement ?

ERRORS.—'ab-it-a-tion for hab-it-a-tion ; cus-sed for curs-ed ; gret for great.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—3. habitation ; 4. crushed ; 5. swalloweth ; 6. affliction ; 9. unsearchable, marvelous ; 12. disappointeth, enterprise ; 13. froward, headlong ; 17. correcteth ; 21. destruction ; 24. tabernacle.

LESSON LV.

RULE.—Be careful to speak such little words as by, in, on, a, and, at, of, etc. very distinctly, and yet not to dwell on them so long as on other more important words.

The Righteous never Forsaken.—NEW YORK SPECTATOR.

1. It was Saturday night, and the widow of the Pine Cottage sat by her blazing fagots with her five tattered children at her side, endeavoring by listening to the artlessness of their prattle, to dissipate the heavy gloom that pressed upon her mind. For a year, her own feeble hand had provided for her helpless family, for she had no supporter: she thought of no friend in all the wide, unfriendly world around.

2. But that mysterious Providence, the wisdom of whose ways is above human comprehension, had visited her with wasting sickness, and her little means had become exhausted. It was now, too, midwinter, and the snow lay heavy and deep through all the surrounding forests, while storms still seemed gathering in the heavens, and the driving wind roared amidst the bounding pines, and rocked her puny mansion.

3. The last herring smoked upon the coals before her ; it was the only article of food she possessed, and no wonder her forlorn, desolate state brought up in her lone bosom all the anxieties of a mother, when she looked upon her children ; and no wonder, forlorn as she was, if she suffered the heart swellings of despair to rise, even though she knew that he whose promise is to the widow and to the orphan, cannot forget his word.

4. Providence had many years before taken from her her eldest son, who went from his forest home, to try his fortune on the high seas, since which she had heard no note of tidings of him ; and in her latter time, had, by the hand of death, deprived her of the companion and staff of her earthly pilgrimage, in the person of her husband. Yet to this hour she had been upborne ; she had not only been able to provide for her little flock, but had never lost an opportunity of ministering to the wants of the miserable and destitute.

5. The indolent may well bear with poverty, while the ability to gain sustenance remains. The individual who has but his own wants to supply, may suffer with fortitude the winter of want ; his affections are not wounded, his heart not wrung. The most desolate in populous cities may hope, for charity has not quite closed her hand and heart, and shut her eyes on misery.

6. But the industrious mother of helpless and depending children—far from the reach of human charity, has none of these to console her. And such a one was the widow of the Pine Cottage ; but as she bent over the fire, and took up the last scanty remnant of food, to spread before her children, her spirits seemed to brighten up, as by some sudden and mysterious impulse, and Cowper's beautiful lines came uncalled across her mind—

Judge not the Lord by feeble sense,
But trust him for his grace ;
Behind a frowning Providence
He hides a smiling face.

7. The smoked herring was scarcely laid upon the table, when a gentle rap at the door, and loud barking of a dog, attracted the attention of the family. The children flew to open it, and a weary traveler, in tattered garments, and apparently indifferent health, entered and begged a lodging, and a mouthful of food ; said he " it is now twenty-four hours since I tasted bread." The widow's heart bled anew as under a fresh complication of distresses ; for her sympathies lingered not round her fireside. She hesitated not even now; rest and share of all she had she proffered to the stranger. "We shall not be forsaken," said she, "or suffer deeper for an act of charity."

8. The traveler drew near the board—but when he saw the scanty fare, he raised his eyes towards heaven with astonishment—"and is this all your store?" said he—"and a share of this do you offer to one you know not? then never saw I charity before! but madam," said he, continuing, "do you not wrong your children by giving a part of your last mouthful to a stranger?" "Ah," said the poor widow, and the tear drops gushed into her eyes as she said it, "I have a boy, a darling son, somewhere on the face of the wide world, unless heaven has taken him away, and I only act towards you, as I would that others should act towards him.

9. God, who sent manna from heaven, can provide for us as he did for Israel—and how should I this night offend him, if my son should be a wanderer, destitute as you, and he should have provided for him a home, even poor as this—were I to turn you unrelieved away."

10. The widow ended, and the stranger, springing from his seat, clasped her in his arms,—“God indeed has provided your son a home—and has given him wealth to reward the goodness of his benefactress—my mother! oh my mother!”

11. It was her long lost son; returned to her bosom from the Indies. He had chosen that disguise that he might the more completely surprise his family; and never was surprise more perfect, or followed by a sweeter cup of joy. That humble residence in the forest was exchanged for one comfortable, and indeed beautiful, in the valley; and the widow lived long with her dutiful son, in the enjoyment of worldly plenty, and in the delightful employments of virtue: and at this day the passer-by is pointed to the willow that spreads its branches above her grave.

QUESTIONS.—1. Can you give a sketch of the widow's history? 2. Can evil ever come from judiciously obeying the dictates of benevolence?

ERRORS.—Sat-a-dy for Sat-ur-day; her-rin' for her-ring; for-git for for-get; ti-din's for ti-dings.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. endeavoring, artlessness, supporter; 2. mysterious, comprehension, exhausted, surrounding; 3. anxieties, swellings; 4. providence, pilgrimage; 5. sustenance, individual; 6. frowning; 7. apparently, indifferent, sympathies; 8. astonishment; 9. unrelieved; 10. benefactress; 11. exchanged.

Religion the only Basis of Society.

CHANNING.

1. Religion is a social concern ; for it operates powerfully on society, contributing, in various ways, to its stability and prosperity. Religion is not merely a private affair ; the community is deeply interested in its diffusion ; for it is the best support of the virtues and principles, on which the social order rests. Pure and undefiled religion is, to do good ; and it follows, very plainly, that, if God be the Author and Friend of society, then, the recognition of him must force all social duty, and enlightened piety must give its whole strength to public order.

2. Few men suspect, perhaps no man comprehends, the extent of the support given by religion to every virtue. No man, perhaps, is aware, how much our moral and social sentiments are fed from this fountain ; how powerless conscience would become, without the belief of a God ; how palsied would be human benevolence, were there not the sense of a higher benevolence to quicken and sustain it ; how suddenly the whole social fabric would quake, and with what a fearful crash it would sink into hopeless ruin, were the ideas of a supreme Being, of accountableness, and of a future life, to be utterly erased from every mind.

3. And, let men thoroughly believe that they are the work and sport of chance ; that no superior intelligence concerns itself with human affairs ; that all their improvements perish forever at death ; that the weak have no guardian, and the injured no avenger ; that there is no recompense for sacrifices to uprightness and the public good : that an oath is unheard in heaven ; that secret crimes have no witness but the perpetrator ; that human existence has no purpose, and human virtue no unfailing friend ; that this brief life is every thing to us, and death is total, everlasting extinction ; once let them thoroughly abandon religion ; and who can conceive or describe the extent of the desolation which would follow!

4. We hope, perhaps, that human laws and natural sympathy would hold society together. As reasonably might we believe, that were the sun quenched in the heavens, our torches would illuminate, and our fires quicken and fertilize the creation. What is there in human nature to awaken respect and tenderness, if man is the unprotected insect of a day? And what is he more, if atheism be true?

5. Erase all thought and fear of God from a community, and selfishness and sensuality would absorb the whole man. Appetite, knowing no restraint, and suffering, having no solace or hope, would trample in scorn on the restraints of human laws. Virtue, duty, principle, would be mocked and spurned as unmeaning sounds. A sordid self-interest would supplant every feeling; and man would become, in fact, what the theory of atheism declares him to be,—a companion for brutes.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is the operation of religion upon society? 2. What would be the effect of the removal of religion, upon the whole fabric of virtue? 3. Why would not human laws and sympathies hold society together?

ERRORS.—vir-too for vir-tue; reas'-na-bly for rea-son-a-bly; room'-nate for ru-mi-nate.

! SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. contributing, community, diffusing, recognition, enlightened; 2. comprehends, sentiments, powerless, conscience, accountableness; 3. intelligence, recompense, perpetrator; 4. illuminate, unprotected; 5. selfishness, atheism.

LESSON LVII.

RULE.—Be careful to notice every comma, and stop long enough to take breath.

Benevolence of the Supreme Being.

CHALMERS.

1. It is saying much for the benevolence of God, to say, that a single world, or a single system, is not enough for it—that it must have the spread of a mightier region, on which it may pour forth a tide of exuberancy throughout all its provinces—that, as far as our vision can carry us, it has strewed immensity with the floating receptacles of life, and has stretched over each of them the garniture of such a sky as mantles our own habitation—and that, even from distances which are far beyond the reach of human eye, the songs of gratitude and praise may now be arising to the one God, who sits surrounded by the regards of his great and universal family.

† 2. Now, it is saying much for the benevolence of God, to say, that it sends forth these wide and distant emanations over the surface of a territory so ample—that the world we inhabit, lying imbedded as it does, amidst so much surrounding greatness, shrinks into a point, that to the universal eye might appear to be almost imperceptible.

3. But does it not add to the power and to the perfection of this universal eye, that at the very moment it is taking a comprehensive survey of the vast, it can fasten a steady and undistracted attention on each minute and separate portion of it; that at the very moment it is looking at all worlds, it can look most pointedly and most intelligently to each of them; that at the very moment it sweeps the field of immensity, it can settle all the earnestness of its regards upon every distinct hand-breadth of that field; that at the very moment at which it embraces the totality of existence, it can send a most thorough and penetrating inspection into each of its details, and into every one of its endless diversities?

† 4. You cannot fail to perceive how much this adds to the power of the all-seeing eye. Tell me, then, if it do not add as much perfection to the benevolence of God, that while it is expatiating over the vast field of created things, there is not one portion of the field overlooked by it; that while it scatters blessings over the whole of an infinite range, it causes them to descend in a shower of plenty on every separate habitation; that while his arm is underneath and round about all worlds, he enters within the precincts of every one of them, and gives a care and a tenderness to each individual of their teeming population.

5. Oh! does not the God, who is said to be love, shed over this attribute of his, its finest illustration! when, while he sits in the highest heaven, and pours out his fullness on the whole subordinate domain of nature and of providence, he bows a pitying regard on the very humblest of his children, and sends his reviving spirit into every heart, and cheers by his presence every home, and provides for the wants of every family, and watches every sick bed, and listens to the complaints of every sufferer; and while, by his wondrous mind, the weight of universal government is borne, oh! is it not more wondrous and more excellent still, that he feels for every sorrow, and has an ear open to every prayer!

QUESTIONS.—1. Compared with the whole universe, what is this single world? 2. What must, then, be the benevolence which could create such an universe? 3. What higher idea of the intellectual power, as well as goodness of the Creator, does it excite, to reflect, that not the smallest field of this immeasurable universe, is left unnoticed, or unprovided for? 4. Where is it said that "God is love?"

ERRORS.—sys-tum for sys-tem; ek-zoo-bur-un-cy for ex-u-ber-an-cy; hez and hed for has and had; im-pre-cep-ti-ble for im-per-cep-ti-ble; say-in for say-ing; set for sit; chil-dern for chil-dren.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. mightier, exuberancy, immensity, receptacles, garniture, surrounded; 2. emanations, imbedded, surrounding, imperceptible; 3. comprehensive, undistracted, pointedly, intelligently, earnestness, totality, penetrating, inspection, diversities; expatiating, overlooked, teeming, population; 5. subordinate, government, illustration.

LESSON LVIII.

RULE—Do not let the voice grow weaker at the last words of a sentence.

Love of Applause.—HAWES.

1. To be insensible to public opinion, or to the estimation in which we are held by others, indicates any thing, rather than a good and generous spirit. It is indeed the mark of a low and worthless character;—devoid of principle, and therefore devoid of shame. A young man is not far from ruin, when he can say, without blushing, I don't care what others think of me.

2. But to have a proper regard to public opinion is one thing; to make that opinion our rule of action is quite another. The one we may cherish consistently with the purest virtue, and the most unbending rectitude; the other we cannot adopt, without an utter abandonment of principle and disregard of duty.

3. The young man whose great aim is to please, who makes the opinion and favor of others his rule and motive of action; stands ready to adopt any sentiments, or pursue any course of conduct, however false and criminal, provided only that it be popular.

4. In every emergency, his first question is, what will my companions, what will the world think and say of me, if I adopt this, or that course of conduct? Duty, the eternal laws of rectitude, are not thought of. Custom, fashion, popular favor; these are the things, that fill his entire vision, and decide every question of opinion and duty.

5. Such a man can never be trusted; for he has no integrity, and no independence of mind, to obey the dictates of rectitude. He is at the mercy of every casual impulse and change of popular opinion; and you can no more tell whether he will be right or wrong to-morrow, than you can predict the course of the wind, or what shape the clouds will then assume.

6. And what is the usual consequence of this weak and foolish regard to the opinions of men? What the end of thus acting in compliance with custom in opposition to one's own convictions of duty? It is to lose the esteem and respect of the very men whom you thus attempt to please. Your defect of principle and hollow heartedness are easily perceived; and though the persons to whom you thus sacrifice your conscience, may affect to commend your complaisance, you may be assured, that, inwardly, they despise you for it.

7. Young men hardly commit a greater mistake, than to think of gaining the esteem of others, by yielding to their wishes, contrary to their own sense of duty. Such conduct is always morally wrong, and rarely fails to deprive one, both of self respect and the respect of others.

8. It is very common, for young men just commencing business, to imagine that, if they would advance their secular interests, they must not be very scrupulous in binding themselves down to the strict rules of rectitude. They must conform to custom; and if in buying and selling they sometimes say the things that are not true, and do the things that are not honest; why, their neighbors do the same; and verily, there is no getting along without it. There is so much competition and rivalry, that to be strictly honest, and yet succeed in business, is out of the question.

9. Now if it were indeed so, I would say to a young man; then, quit your business. Better dig, and beg too, than to tamper with conscience, sin against God, and lose your soul.

10. But, is it so?—is it necessary in order to succeed in business, that you should adopt a standard of morals, more lax and pliable, than the one placed before you in the Bible? Perhaps for a time, a rigid adherence to rectitude might bear hard upon you; but how would it be in the end? Possibly, your neighbor, by being less scrupulous than yourself, may invent a more expeditious way of acquiring a fortune. If he is willing to violate the dictates of conscience; to lie and cheat, and trample on the rules of justice and honesty, he may, indeed, get the start of you, and rise suddenly to wealth and distinction.

11. But would you envy him his riches, or be willing to place yourself in his situation? Sudden wealth, especially when obtained by dishonest means, rarely fails of bringing with it sudden ruin. Those who acquire it, are of course beggared in their morals, and are often, very soon, beggared in property. Their riches are corrupted; and while they bring the curse of God on their immediate possessors, they usually entail misery and ruin upon their families.

12. If it be admitted then, that strict integrity is not always the shortest way to success; is it not the surest, the happiest and the best? A young man of thorough integrity may, it is true, find it difficult in the midst of dishonest competitors and rivals, to start in his business or profession; but how long, ere he will surmount every difficulty; draw around him patrons and friends, and rise in the confidence and support of all who know him?

13. What, if in pursuing this course, you should not, at the close of life, have so much money by a few hundred dollars? Will not a fair character, an approving conscience, and an approving God, be an abundant compensation for this little deficiency of pelf?

14. O there is an hour coming, when one whisper of an approving mind, one smile of an approving God, will be accounted of more value than the wealth of a thousand worlds like this. In that hour, my young friends, nothing will sustain you but the consciousness of having been governed in life by worthy and good principles.

QUESTIONS.—1. What must be said of a total disregard of public opinion in a young man? 2. What is the effect of making public opinion the rule of life? 3. What erroneous opinion respecting strict honesty is common? 4. Is it a well founded opinion?

ERRORS.—wuth-liss for worth-less; t'oth-er for the oth-er; pop-pel-er for pop-u-lar.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. insensible, estimation; 2. consistently, unbending, abandonment; 3. criminal; 4. companions; 5. integrity, independence; 6. compliance, hollow-hearted; 8. commencing, neighbors, competition; 9. conscience; 10. adherence, expeditions; 11. beggared; 13. compensation; 14. consciousness.

LESSON LIX.

RULE.—Sound the vowels correctly and very full.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE.—Prolong the following vowel sounds that are italicised.—a-ge, a-we, a-ri, o-l, ou-r, ee-l, oo-ze, bu-oy, i-sle.

Scripture Lesson.

1. Then the Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind, and said,
 Who is this that darkeneth counsel
 By words without knowledge?
 Gird up now thy loins like a man;
 For I will demand of thee, and answer thou me.
2. Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth?
 Declare, if thou hast understanding.
 Who hath laid the measures thereof, if thou knowest?
 Or who hath stretched the line upon it?
 Whereupon are the foundations thereof fastened?
 Or who laid the corner stone thereof:
 When the morning stars sang together,
 And all the sons of God shouted for joy?
3. Or who shut up the sea with doors,
 When it brake forth, as if it had issued out of the womb?
 When I made the cloud the garment thereof,
 And thick darkness a swaddling band for it,
 And brake up for it my decreed place,
 And set bars and doors,
 And said, Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further:
 And here shall thy proud waves be stayed?
4. Hast thou commanded the morning since thy days;
 And caused the dayspring to know his place;
 That it might take hold of the ends of the earth,
 That the wicked might be shaken out of it?
 It is turned as clay to the seal;
 And they stand as a garment.
 And from the wicked their light is withholden,
 And the high arm shall be broken.
5. Hast thou entered into the springs of the sea?
 Or hast thou walked in the search of the depth?
 Have the gates of death been opened unto thee?
 Or hast thou seen the doors of the shadow of death?
 Hast thou perceived the breadth of the earth?
 Declare if thou knowest it all.

6. Where is the way where light dwelleth ;
And as for darkness, where is the place thereof,
That thou shouldest take it to the bound thereof,
And that thou shouldest know the paths to the house thereof ?
Knowest thou it, because thou wast then born ?
Or because the number of thy days is great ?
7. Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow ?
Or hast thou seen the treasures of the hail,
Which I have reserved against the time of trouble,
Against the day of battle and war ?
8. By what way is the light parted,
Which scattereth the east wind upon the earth ?
Who hath divided a watercourse for the overflowing of waters,
Or a way for the lightning of thunder ;
To cause it to rain on the earth, where no man is ;
On the wilderness, wherein there is no man ;
To satisfy the desolate and waste ground ;
And to cause the bud of the tender herb to spring forth ?
9. Hast thou given the horse strength ?
Hast thou clothed his neck with thunder ?
Canst thou make him afraid as a grasshopper ?
The glory of his nostrils is terrible.
He paweth in the valley, and rejoiceth in his strength ;
He goeth out to meet the armed men.
10. He mocketh at fear, and is not affrighted ;
Neither turneth he back from the sword.
The quiver rattleth against him,
The glittering spear and the shield.
He swalloweth the ground with fierceness and rage ;
Neither believeth he that it is the sound of the trumpet.
He saith among the trumpets, Ha ! ha !
And he smelleth the battle afar off,
The thunder of the captains, and the shouting.

QUESTIONS.—1. Is this poetry ? 2. Can you select a metaphor and a simile, from the many to be found in this lesson ?

ERRORS.—stun for stone ; mor-nin', o-ver-flow-in', light-nin', glit-ter-in', shout-in', incorrectly terminated with in' for ing, entirely destroying the beauty of any passage.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. whirlwind, darkeneth ; 2. foundations, whereupon ; 3. swaddling-band ; 4. dayspring, withholden ; 5. perceived ; 6. shouldest ; 8. watercourse, wilderness ; 9. grasshopper ; 10. affrighted, swalloweth, fierceness.

LESSON LX.

RULE.—Do not read in a monotonous way, as if you were not interested in what you read.

*Ludicrous Account of English Taxes.BROUGHAM.

1. Permit me to inform you, my friends, what are the inevitable consequences of being too fond of glory;—Taxes—upon every article which enters into the mouth, or covers the back, or is placed under the foot—taxes upon every thing which it is pleasant to see, hear, feel, smell, or taste—taxes upon warmth, light, and locomotion—taxes on every thing on earth, and in the waters under the earth—on every thing that comes from abroad, or is grown at home—taxes on the raw material—taxes on every fresh value that is added to it by the industry of man—taxes on the sauce which pampers man's appetite, and the drug which restores him to health—on the ermine which decorates the judge, and the rope which hangs the criminal—on the poor man's salt, and the rich man's spice—on the brass nails of the coffin, and the ribbons of the bride—at bed or board, couchant or levant, we must pay.

2. The school boy whips his taxed top—the beardless youth manages his taxed horse, with a taxed bridle on a taxed road;—and the dying Englishman, pouring his medicine which has paid seven per cent., into a spoon that has paid fifteen per cent.—flings himself back upon his chintz bed which has paid twenty two per cent.—makes his will on an eight pound stamp, and expires in the arms of an apothecary, who has paid a license of an hundred pounds for the privilege of putting him to death.

3. His whole property is then immediately taxed from two to ten per cent. Besides the probate, large fees are demanded for burying him in the chancel; his virtues are handed down to posterity on taxed marble; and he is then gathered to his fathers—to be taxed no more.

4. In addition to all this, the habit of dealing with large sums will make the government avaricious and profuse; and the system itself will infallibly generate the base vermin of spies and informers, and a still more pestilent race of political tools and retainers, of the meanest and most odious description;—while the prodigious patronage, which the collecting of this splendid revenue will throw into the hands of government, will invest it with so vast an influence, and hold out such means and temptations to corruption, as all the virtue and public spirit, even of republicans, will be unable to resist.

QUESTIONS.—Can you enumerate some of the benefits of a system of taxation? 2. What will be the effect of the system upon the probity and purity of government?

ERRORS.—lo-cum-o-tion for lo-co-mo-tion; sass for sauce; whops for whips; baird for beard; pow-er-ing for pour-ing; var-ment for ver-min.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. inevitable, consequences, locomotion, pamper appetite, ermine, decorates, couchant, levant; 2. schoolboy, beardless, medium, chintz, apothecary; 3. immediately, probate, chancel; 4. avaricious, infallibly, generate, prodigious, republicans.

LESSON LXI.

RULE.—Pronounce the consonant sounds very distinctly.

EXAMPLE.—Prolong the consonant sounds that are italicised in the following words.—or-b, ai-d, a-ll, ar-m, ow-n, so-ng, wa-r, sa-ve, ama-z-e.

Christ and the Blind Man.—BIBLE.

1. And as Jesus passed by, he saw a man which was blind from his birth. And his disciples asked him, saying, Master, who did sin, this man or his parents, that he was born blind?

2. Jesus answered, Neither hath this man sinned nor his parents, but that the works of God should be made manifest in him.

3. I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day; the night cometh when no man can work. As long as I am in the world, I am the light of the world.

4. When he had thus spoken, he spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle, and he anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay, and said unto him, Go, wash in the pool of Siloam, (which is, by interpretation, Sent.)

5. He went his way, therefore, and washed, and came seeing. The neighbors therefore, and they which before had seen him, that he was blind, said, Is not this he that sat and begged?

6. Some said, This is he; others said, He is like him: but he said, I am he. Therefore said they unto him, How were thine eyes opened?

7. He answered and said, a man that is called Jesus, made clay, and anointed mine eyes, and said unto me, Go to the pool of Siloam, and wash: and I went and washed, and I received sight. Then said they unto him, Where is he? He said, I know not.

8. They brought to the Pharisees him that afore time was blind. And it was the Sabbath day when Jesus made the clay, and opened his eyes.

9. Then again the Pharisees also asked him how he had received his sight. He said unto them, He put clay upon mine eyes, and I washed and do see.

10. Therefore said some of the Pharisees, This man is not of God, because he keepeth not the Sabbath day. Others said, How can a man that is a sinner, do such miracles?

11. And there was a division among them. They say unto the blind man again, What sayest thou of him? that he hath opened thine eyes? He said, He is a prophet.

12. But the Jews did not believe concerning him that he had been blind, and received his sight, until they called the parents of him that had received his sight.

13. And they asked them, saying, Is this your son, who ye say was born blind? how then doth he now see?

14. His parents answered them and said, We know that this is our son, and that he was born blind: But by what means he now seeth, we know not; or who hath opened his eyes, we know not: he is of age, ask him, he shall speak for himself.

15. These words spake his parents, because they feared the Jews: for the Jews had agreed already, that if any man did confess that he was Christ, he should be put out of the synagogue.

16. Therefore said his parents, he is of age, ask him. Then again called they the man that was blind, and said, Give God the praise: we know that this man is a sinner.

17. He answered and said, Whether he be a sinner or no, I know not; one thing I know, that whereas I was blind now I see.

18. Then said they to him again, What did he to thee? How opened he thine eyes? He answered them, I have told you already, and ye did not hear: wherefore would ye hear it again? Will ye also be his disciples?

19. Then they reviled him, and said, Thou art his disciple; but we are Moses' disciples. We know that God spake unto Moses : as for this fellow, we know not from whence he is.

20. The man answered and said unto them, Why, herein is a marvelous thing, that ye know not from whence he is, and yet he hath opened mine eyes.

21. Now we know that God heareth not sinners : but if any man be a worshiper of God, and doeth his will, him he heareth. Since the world began was it not heard, that any man opened the eyes of one that was born blind. If this man were not of God, he could do nothing.

22. They answered and said unto him, Thou wast altogether born in sins, and dost thou teach us ? And they cast him out.

23. Jesus heard that they had cast him out ; and when he had found him, he said unto him, Dost thou believe on the Son of God ?

24. He answered and said, Who is he, Lord ? that I might believe on him ? And Jesus said unto him, Thou hast both seen him, and it is he that talketh with thee.

25. And he said, Lord, I believe. And he worshiped him.

26. And Jesus said, For judgment I am come into this world : that they which see not, might see ; and that they which see, might be made blind.

27. And some of the Pharisees which were with him heard these words, and said unto him, Are we blind also ?

28. Jesus said unto them, If ye were blind, ye should have no sin : but now ye say, We see ; Therefore your sin remaineth.

QUESTIONS.—1. From what part of the Bible was this lesson taken ? 2. What miracle is recorded in it ? 3. Who performed this miracle ? 4. What means did he make use of ? 5. Will clay, prepared in the same manner, restore sight to the blind now ? 6. Would it ever, if prepared by any mere man ? 7. Was Christ a mere man ? 8. This miracle, and many others, were performed openly—Why were not the Jews convinced by them, that he came from God ? 9. How did the Jews treat the man whose sight was restored ? 10. Why did they put him out of the synagogue ?

ERRORS.—heth for hath ; a-nint-ed for an-oint-ed ; in-ter-per-ta-tion for in-ter-pre-ta-tion ; thar-fore for there-fore ; a-gain, pronounced a-gen ; Phar'-sees for Phar-i-sees.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. disciple ; 2. manifest ; 4. anointed, interpretation ; 5. neighbors ; 10. miracles ; 11. division, prophet ; 15. synagogue ; 19. reviled ; 20. marvelous ; 22. altogether ; 25. worshiped ; 26. judgment ; 28. therefore.

LESSON LXII

RULE.—In reading poetry that rhymes, there should be a slight pause after the words that rhyme, even when the sense does not require it.

The Ocean.—ANONYMOUS.

1. Likeness of heaven! agent of power!
Man is thy victim! shipwrecks thy dower!
Spices and jewels, from valley and sea,
Armies and banners are buried in thee!
2. What are the riches of Mexico's mines,
To the wealth that far down in thy deep water shines?
The proud navies that cover the conquering west—
Thou fling'st them to death with one heave of thy breast!
3. From the high hills that view thy wreck-making shore,
When the bride of the mariner shrieks at thy roar;
When, like lambs in the tempest, or mews in the blast,
O'er ridge-broken billows the canvass is cast;
4. How humbling to one with a heart and a soul,
To look on thy greatness and list to its roll;
To think how that heart in cold ashes shall be,
While the voice of eternity rises from thee!
5. Yes! where are the cities of Thebes and of Tyre?
Swept from the nations like sparks from the fire;
The glory of Athens, the splendor of Rome,
Dissolved—and for ever—like dew in the foam.
6. But thou art almighty—eternal—sublime—
Unweakened, unwasted—twin brother of time!
Flots, tempests, nor nations, thy glory can bow;
As the stars first beheld thee, still chainless art thou!
But, hold! when thy surges no longer shall roll,
And that firmament's length is drawn back like a scroll;
Then—then shall the spirit that sighs by thee now,
Be more mighty—more lasting, more chainless than thou!

QUESTIONS.—How is ocean an “agent of power?” 2. What comparison is made in verse 3, lines 3 and 4? 3. What sentiments are inspired by viewing the ocean? (verse 4.) 4. How will the soul's duration, and that of the ocean compare?

ERRORS.—ship-wracks for ship-wrecks; bil-las for bil-lows; A-thens for Ath-ens; Roome for Rome; tem-pes's for tem-pests.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. likeness, shipwrecks; 2. conquering; 3. wreck-making, shrieks, ridge-broken, canvass; 5. dissolved; 6. almighty, eternal, sublime, unweakened, unwasted, chainless; 7. firmaments.

LESSON LXIII.

RULE.—Let each pupil in the class observe and mention every syllable that is not sounded as each one reads.

The Horrors of War.—ROBERT HALL.

1. Though the whole race of man is doomed to dissolution, and we are hastening to our long home; yet at each successive moment, life and death seem to divide between them the dominion of mankind, and life to have the larger share. It is otherwise in war; death reigns there without a rival, and without control.

2. War is the work, the element, or rather the sport and triumph of death, who here glories not only in the extent of his conquests, but in the richness of his spoil. In the other methods of attack, in the other forms which death assumes the feeble and the aged, who at best can live but a short time, are usually the victims; here they are the vigorous and the strong.

3. It is remarked by the most ancient of poets, that in peace, children bury their parents; in war, parents bury their children; nor is the difference small. Children lament their parents, sincerely, indeed, but with that moderate and tranquil sorrow, which it is natural for those to feel who are conscious of retaining many tender ties, many animating prospects.

4. Parents mourn for their children with the bitterness of despair; the aged parent, the widowed mother, loses, when she is deprived of her children, every thing but the capacity of suffering; her heart, withered and desolate, admits no other object, cherishes no other hope. It is Rachel, weeping for her children, and refusing to be comforted, because they are not.

5. But, to confine our attention to the number of the slain would give us a very inadequate idea of the ravages of the sword. The lot of those who perish instantaneously may be considered, apart from religious prospects as comparatively happy, since they are exempt from those lingering diseases and slow torments to which others are so liable.

6. We cannot see an individual expire, though a stranger, or an enemy, without being sensibly moved and prompted by compassion to lend him every assistance in our power. Every trace of resentment vanishes in a moment; every other emotion gives way to pity and terror.

7. In the last extremities we remember nothing but the respect and tenderness due to our common nature. What a scene, then, must a field of battle present, where thousands are left without assistance, and without pity, with their wounds exposed to the piercing air, while the blood, freezing as it flows, binds them to the earth, amidst the trampling of horses, and the insults of an enraged foe !

8. If they are spared by the humanity of the enemy, and carried from the field, it is but a prolongation of torment. Conveyed in uneasy vehicles, often to a remote distance, through roads almost impassable, they are lodged in ill-prepared receptacles for the wounded and sick, where the variety of distress baffles all the efforts of humanity and skill, and renders it impossible to give to each the attention he demands.

9. Far from their native home, no tender assiduities of friendship, no well-known voice, no wife, or mother, or sister, is near to soothe their sorrows, relieve their thirst, or close their eyes in death ! Unhappy man ! and must you be swept into the grave unnoticed and unnumbered, and no friendly tear be shed for your sufferings, or mingled with your dust ?

10. We must remember, however, that as a very small proportion of military life is spent in actual combat, so it is a very small part of its miseries which must be ascribed to this source. More are consumed by the rust of inactivity than by the edge of the sword ; confined to a scanty or unwholesome diet, exposed in sickly climates, harassed with tiresome marches and perpetual alarms ; their life is a continual scene of hardships and dangers. They grow familiar with hunger, cold, and watchfulness. Crowded into hospitals and prisons, contagion spreads amongst their ranks, till the ravages of disease exceed those of the enemy.

11. We have hitherto only adverted to the sufferings of those who are engaged in the profession of arms, without taking into our account the situation of the countries which are the scenes of hostilities. How dreadful to hold every thing at the mercy of an enemy, and to receive life itself as a boon dependent on the sword !

12. How boundless the fears which such a situation must inspire, where the issues of life and death are determined by no known laws, principles or customs, and no conjecture can be formed of our destiny, except so far as it is dimly deciphered in characters of blood, in the dictates of revenge, and the caprices of power !

13. Conceive but for a moment the consternation which the approach of an invading army would impress on the peaceful villages in our own neighborhood. When you have placed yourselves for an instant in that situation, you will learn to sympathize with those unhappy countries which have sustained the ravages of arms. But how is it possible to give you an idea of these horrors!

14. Here you behold rich harvests, the bounty of heaven, and the reward of industry, consumed in a moment, or trampled under foot, while famine and pestilence follow the steps of desolation. There the cottages of peasants given up to the flames, mothers expiring through fear, not for themselves, but their infants; the inhabitants flying with their helpless babes in all directions, miserable fugitives on their native soil!

15. In another you witness opulent cities taken by storm; the streets, where no sounds were heard but those of peaceful industry, filled on a sudden with slaughter and blood, resounding with the cries of the pursuing and the pursued; the palaces of nobles demolished, the houses of the rich pillaged, and every age, sex, and rank, mingled in promiscuous massacre and ruin!

QUESTIONS.—1. In peace, does life or death reign? 2. How is it in war? 3. What is the difference between war and peace, according to the ancient poet? 4. Who are victims of war besides those killed outright? 5. Mention some of the most prominent evils of war.

ERRORS.—meth-ids for meth-ods; par-rents for pa-rents; chur-ish-es for cher-ish-es.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. dissolution, successive; 2. vigorous; 5. inadequate, instantaneously; 6. resentment; 8. prolongation; 9. unnumbered; 10. unwholesome, contagion.

LESSON LXIV.

RULE.—Be careful to read the last words of every sentence in as full and loud a tone as the first part.

The Bible.—GRIMKE.

1. The Bible is the only book, which God has ever sent, the only one he ever will send, into this world. All other books are frail and transient as time, since they are only the registers of time; but the Bible is durable as eternity, for its pages contain the records of eternity.

2. All other books are weak and imperfect, like their author, man; but the Bible is a transcript of infinite power and perfection. Every other volume is limited in its usefulness and influence; but the Bible came forth conquering and to conquer: rejoicing as a giant to run his course, and like the sun, "there is nothing hid from the heat thereof."

3. The Bible only, of all the myriads of books the world has seen, is equally important and interesting to all mankind. Its tidings, whether of peace or of wo, are the same to the poor, the ignorant, and the weak, as to the rich, the wise, and the powerful.

4. Among the most remarkable of its attributes, is justice; for it looks with impartial eyes on kings and on slaves, on the hero and the soldier, on philosophers and peasants, on the eloquent and the dumb. From all, it exacts the same obedience to its commandments, and promises to the good, the fruits of his labors; to the evil, the reward of his hands. Nor are the purity and holiness, the wisdom, the benevolence, and truth of the Scriptures, less conspicuous, than their justice.

5. In sublimity and beauty, in the descriptive and pathetic, in dignity and simplicity of narrative, in power and comprehensiveness, depth and variety of thought, in purity and elevation of sentiment, the most enthusiastic admirers of the heathen classics have conceded their inferiority to the Scriptures.

6. The Bible, indeed, is the only universal classic, the classic of all mankind, of every age and country, of time and eternity, more humble and simple than the primer of the child, more grand and magnificent than the epic and the oration, the ode and the drama, when genius, with his chariot of fire, and his horses of fire, ascends in whirlwind, into the heaven of his own invention. It is the best classic the world has ever seen, the noblest that has ever honored and dignified the language of mortals!

7. If you boast that the Aristotles and the Platos and the Tullies, of the classic ages, "dipped their pens in intellect," the sacred authors dipped theirs in inspiration. If those were the "secretaries of nature," these were the secretaries of the very Author of nature.

8. If Greece and Rome have gathered into their cabinet of curiosities, the pearls of heathen poetry and eloquence, the diamonds of Pagan history and philosophy, God himself has treasured up in the Scriptures, the poetry and eloquence, the philosophy and history of sacred lawgivers, of prophets and apostles, of saints, evangelists and martyrs. In vain may you seek for the pure and simple light of universal truth in the Augustan ages of antiquity. In the Bible only is the poet's wish fulfilled,

"And, like the sun, be all one boundless eye."

QUESTIONS.—1. What does the word Bible mean? 2. How did the Bible come into the world? 3. Did God write the Bible? 4. If men wrote it, how can it be called God's book? 5. Was every part of the Bible written at the same time? 6. What is meant when it is said that the Bible contains the "records of eternity?" 7. How can you show it to be so? 8. Mention the six particulars in which the Bible differs from all other books?

ERRORS.—un-ly for on-ly; in-fin-nite for in-fi-nite; vol-um for volume; in-floonce for in-flu-ence; in-trest-in' for in-ter-es-ting; ph'los-o-phers for phi-los-o-phers; con-spic-oo-ous for con-spic-u-ous; cu-ros'-ties for cu-ri-os-i-ties; re-cords for rec-ords; trans-crypt for transcript; ti-dins for ti-dings.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. transient, record, eternity; 2. transcript; 4. conspicuous; 5. comprehensiveness, enthusiastic, inferiority; 6. magnificent, classic; 8. curiosities, evangelists, martyrs.

LESSON LXV.

RULE.—Be careful not to allow the voice to grow weaker and weaker as you approach the end of each sentence.

The Porcupine Temper.—MISS EDGEWORTH.

1. Mrs. Bolingbroke.—I wish I knew what was the matter with me this morning. Why do you keep the newspaper all to yourself, my dear?

2. Mr. Bolingbroke.—Here it is for you, my dear: I have finished it.

3. Mrs. B.—I humbly thank you for giving it to me when you have done with it. I hate stale news. Is there any thing in the paper? for I cannot be at the trouble of hunting it.

4. Mr. B.—Yes, my dear; there are the marriages of two of our friends.

5. Mrs. B.—Who? Who?

6. Mr. B.—Your friend, the widow Nettleby, to her cousin John Nettleby.

7. Mrs. B.—Mrs. Nettleby! Dear! But why did you tell me!

8. Mr. B.—Because you asked me, my dear.

9. Mrs. B.—Oh, but it is a hundred times pleasanter to read the paragraph one's self. One loses all the pleasure of the surprise by being told. Well, whose was the other marriage?

10. Mr. B.—Oh, my dear, I will not tell you; I will leave you the pleasure of the surprise.

11. Mrs. B.—But you see I cannot find it. How provoking you are, my dear! Do pray tell me.

12. Mr. B.—Our friend, Mr. Granby.

13. Mrs. B.—Mr. Granby! Dear! Why did not you make me guess? I should have guessed him directly. But why do you call him our friend? I am sure he is no friend of mine, nor ever was. I took an aversion to him, as you remember, the very first day I saw him. I am sure he is no friend of mine.

14. Mr. B.—I am sorry for it, my dear; but I hope you will go and see Mrs. Granby.

15. Mrs. B.—Not I, indeed, my dear. Who was she?

16. Mr. B.—Miss Cooke.

17. Mrs. B.—Cooke! But there are so many Cookes—Can't you distinguish her any way? Has she no Christian name?

18. Mr. B.—Emma, I think. Yes, Emma.

19. Mrs. B.—Emma Cooke!—No; it cannot be my friend Emma Cooke; for I am sure she was cut out for an old maid.

20. Mr. B.—This lady seems to me to be cut out for a good wife.

21. Mrs. B.—May be so—I am sure I'll never go to see her. Pray, my dear, how came you to see so much of her?

22. Mr. B.—I have seen very little of her, my dear. I only saw her two or three times before she was married.

23. Mrs. B.—Then, my dear, how could you decide that she was cut out for a good wife? I am sure you could not judge of her by seeing her only two or three times, and before she was married.

24. Mr. B.—Indeed, my love, that is a very just observation.

25. Mrs. B.—I understand that compliment perfectly, and thank you for it, my dear. I must own I can bear any thing better than tony.

26. Mr. B.—Irony! my dear, I was perfectly in earnest.

27. Mrs. B.—Yes, yes; in earnest—so I perceive—I may naturally be dull of apprehension, but my feelings are quick enough; I comprehend too well. Yes—it is impossible to judge of a woman before marriage, or to say what sort of a wife she will make. I presume you speak from experience; you have been disappointed yourself, and repent your choice.

28. Mr. B.—My dear, what did I say that was like this? Upon my word, I meant no such thing. I really was not thinking of you in the least.

29. Mrs. B.—No—you never think of me now. I can easily believe that you were not thinking of me in the least.

30. Mr. B.—But I said that only to prove to you that I could not be thinking ill of you, my dear.

31. Mrs. B.—But I would rather that you thought ill of me, than that you did not think of me at all.

32. Mr. B.—Well, my dear, I will even think ill of you, if that will please you.

33. Mrs. B.—Do you laugh at me? When it comes to this, I am wretched indeed. Never man laughed at the woman he loved. As long as you had the slightest remains of love for me, you could not make me an object of derision: ridicule and love are incompatible—absolutely incompatible. Well, I have done my best, my very best, to make you happy, but in vain. I see I am not cut out to be a good wife. Happy, happy Mrs. Granby!

34. Mr. B.—Happy, I hope sincerely, that she will be with my friend; but my happiness must depend on you, my love; so, for my sake, if not for your own, be composed, and do not torment yourself with such fancies.

35. Mrs. B.—I do wonder whether this Mrs. Granby is really that Miss Emma Cooke. I'll go and see her directly; see her I must.

36. Mr. B.—I am heartily glad of it, my dear; for I am sure a visit to his wife will give my friend Granby real pleasure.

37. Mrs. B.—I promise you, my dear, I do not go to give him pleasure or you either? but to satisfy my own curiosity.

QUESTIONS.—1. Does Mrs. B. evince much good sense by the temper she displays? 2. May not people realize their own fear by giving expression to their suspicions? 3. Is it wise for a husband or a wife to speak unfriendly to each other?

ERRORS.—um-bly for hum-bly; ra-ly for re-al-ly; whuth-er for wheth-er; cu-ros-i-ty for cu-ri-os-i-ty.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. newspaper; 2. finished; 4. marriages; 9. paragraph; 11. provoking; 13. remember; 17. distinguish; 25. compliment, irony; 27. apprehension, experience, disappointed; 33. incompatible; 37. curiosity.

LESSON LXVI.

RULE.—When similar sounds come at the end of one word and the beginning of the next word, they must not be blended into one.

EXERCISES.—Malice seeks to destroy.
The breeze sighs softly.
The ice slowly melts.

Political Corruption.—McDUFFIE.

1. We are apt to treat the idea of our own corruptibility, as utterly visionary, and to ask, with a grave affectation of dignity—what! do you think a member of congress can be corrupted? Sir, I speak what I have long and deliberately considered, when I say, that since man was created, there never has been a political body on the face of the earth, that would not be corrupted under the same circumstances. Corruption steals upon us in a thousand insidious forms, when we are least aware of its approaches.

2. Of all the forms in which it can present itself, the bribery of office is the most dangerous, because it assumes the guise of patriotism to accomplish its fatal sorcery. We are often asked, where is the evidence of corruption? Have you seen it? Sir, do you expect to see it? You might as well expect to see the embodied forms of pestilence and famine stalking before you, as to see the latent operations of this insidious power. We may walk amidst it and breathe its contagion, without being conscious of its presence.

3. All experience teaches us the irresistible power of temptation, when vice assumes the form of virtue. The great enemy of mankind could not have consummated his infernal scheme for the seduction of our first parents, but for the disguise in which he presented himself. Had he appeared as the devil, in his proper form: had the spear of Ithuriel disclosed the naked deformity of the fiend of hell, the inhabitants of paradise would have shrunk with horror from his presence.

4. But he came as the insinuating serpent, and presented a beautiful apple, the most delicious fruit in all the garden. He told his glowing story to the unsuspecting victim of his guile. "It can be no crime to taste of this delightful fruit. It will disclose to you the knowledge of good and evil. It will raise you to an equality with the angels."

5. Such, sir, was the process; and in this simple but impressive narrative, we have the most beautiful and philosophical illustration of the frailty of man, and the power of temptation, that could possibly be exhibited. Mr. Chairman, I have been forcibly struck with the similarity between our present situation and that of Eve, after it was announced that Satan was on the borders of paradise. We, too, have been warned that the enemy are on our borders.

6. But God forbid that the similitude should be carried any farther. Eve, conscious of her innocence, sought temptation and defied it. The catastrophe is too fatally known to us all. She went, "with the blessings of heaven on her head, and its purity in her heart," guarded by the ministry of angels—she returned, covered with shame, under the heavy denunciation of heaven's everlasting curse.

7. Sir, it is innocence that temptation conquers. If our first parent, pure as she came from the hand of God, was overcome by the seductive power, let us not imitate her fatal rashness, seeking temptation, when it is in our power to avoid it. Let us not vainly confide in our own infallibility. We are liable to be corrupted. To an ambitious man, an honorable office will appear as beautiful and fascinating as the apple of paradise.

8. I admit, sir, that ambition is a passion, at once the most powerful and the most useful. Without it, human affairs would become a mere stagnant pool. By means of his patronage, the president addresses himself in the most irresistible manner, to this, the noblest and strongest of our passions. All that the imagination can desire—honor, power, wealth, ease, are held out as the temptation. Man was not made to resist such temptation. It is impossible to conceive, Satan himself could not devise, a system which would more infallibly introduce corruption and death into our political Eden. Sir, the angels fell from heaven with less temptation.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is meant by the corruption of a political body? 2. What is the most dangerous form in which this can approach? 3. What is said of the passion of ambition? 4. By what is the progress of temptation in overcoming innocence illustrated?

ERRORS.—corruption for cor-rup-tion; office for office; pu-er and pu-er for pure.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. corruptibility, visionary, affectation, deliberately, circumstances, insidious; 2. patriotism, accomplish, contagion; 3. irresistible, consummated, deformity; 4. insinuating, knowledge; 5. impressive, philosophical; 6. similitude, catastrophe, denunciation; 7. infallibility, ambitious, fascinating; 8. imagination, introduce.

LESSON LXVII.

RULE.—Be careful to observe the commas, and stop long enough to take breath.

The Blind Preacher.—WIRT.

1. As I traveled through the county of Orange, my eye was caught by a cluster of horses tied near a ruinous, old, wooden house in the forest, not far from the road-side. Having frequently seen such objects before, in traveling through these States, I had no difficulty in understanding that this was a place of religious worship.

2. Devotion alone should have stopped me, to join in the duties of the congregation : but I must confess, that curiosity to hear the preacher of such a wilderness, was not the least of my motives. On entering, I was struck with his preternatural appearance. He was a tall and very spare old man ; his head, which was covered with a white linen cap, his shriveled hands, and his voice, were all shaking under the influence of a palsy ; and a few moments ascertained to me that he was perfectly blind.

3. The first emotions that touched my breast were those of mingled pity and veneration. But how soon were all my feelings changed ? The lips of Plato were never more worthy of a prognostic swarm of bees, than were the lips of this holy man ! It was a day of the administration of the sacrament ; and his subject was, of course, the passion of our Savior. I had heard the subject handled a thousand times ; I had thought it exhausted long ago. Little did I suppose that in the wild woods of America, I was to meet with a man, whose eloquence would give to this topic a new and more sublime pathos, than I had ever before witnessed.

4. As he descended from the pulpit to distribute the mystic symbols, there was a peculiar, a more than human solemnity in his air and manners, which made my blood run cold, and my whole frame shiver.

5. He then drew a picture of the sufferings of our Savior ; his trial before Pilate ; his ascent up Calvary ; his crucifixion ; I knew the whole history : but never until then had I ever heard the circumstances so selected, so arranged, so colored ! It was all new ; and I seemed to have heard it for the first time in my life. His enunciation was so deliberate, that his voice trembled on every syllable: and every heart in the assembly trembled in unison.

6. His peculiar phrases had that force of description, that the original scene appeared to be at that moment acting before our eyes. We saw the very faces of the Jews; the staring, frightful distortions of malice and rage. We saw the buffet: my soul kindled with a flame of indignation; and my hands were involuntarily and convulsively clenched.

7. But when he came to touch on the patience, the forgiving meekness of our Savior; when he drew, to the life, his voice breathing to God a soft and gentle prayer of pardon on his enemies, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do,"—the voice of the preacher, which had all along faltered, grew fainter and fainter, until, his utterance being entirely obstructed by the force of his feelings, he raised his handkerchief to his eyes, and burst into a loud and irrepressible flood of grief. The effect is inconceivable. The whole house resounded with the mingled groans, and sobs, and shrieks of the congregation.

8. It was some time before the tumult had subsided, so far as to permit him to proceed. Indeed, judging by the usual, but fallacious standard of my own weakness, I began to be very uneasy for the situation of the preacher. For I could not conceive how he would be able to let his audience down from the height to which he had wound them, without impairing the solemnity and dignity of his subject, or perhaps shocking them by the abruptness of his fall. But—no: the descent was as beautiful and sublime as the elevation had been rapid and enthusiastic.

9. The first sentence, with which he broke the awful silence, was a quotation from Rousseau: "Socrates died like a philosopher, but Jesus Christ, like a God!"

10. I despair of giving you any idea of the effect produced by this short sentence, unless you could perfectly conceive the whole manner of the man, as well as the peculiar crisis in the discourse. Never before did I completely understand what Demosthenes meant by laying such stress on delivery.

11. You are to bring before you the venerable figure of the preacher; his blindness, constantly recalling to your recollection old Homer, Ossian, and Milton, and associating with his performance the melancholy grandeur of their geniuses; you are to imagine that you hear his slow, solemn, well-accented enunciation, and his voice of affecting trembling melody ; you are to remember the pitch of passion and enthusiasm, to which the congregation were raised ; and then the few moments of portentous, death-like silence, which reigned throughout the house : the preacher, removing his white handkerchief from his aged face, (even yet wet from the recent torrent of his tears,) and slowly stretching forth the palsied hand which held it, begins the sentence, "Socrates died like a philosopher"—then, pausing, raising his other, pressing them both, clasped together, with warmth and energy, to his breast, lifting his "sightless balls" to heaven, and pouring his whole soul into his tremulous voice—"but Jesus Christ—like a God !"

12. If he had been indeed and in truth an angel of light, the effect could scarcely have been more divine. Whatever I had been able to conceive of the sublimity of Massillon or the force of Bourdaloue, had fallen far short of the power which I felt from the delivery of this simple sentence.

13. If this description give you the impression, that this incomparable minister had any thing of shallow, theatrical trick in his manner, it does him great injustice. I have never seen, in any other orator, such a union of simplicity and majesty. He has not a gesture, an attitude, or an accent, to which he does not seem forced by the sentiment he is expressing. His mind is too serious, too earnest, too solicitous, and, at the same time too dignified, to stoop to artifice.

14. Although as far removed from ostentation as a man can be, yet it is clear, from the train, the style and substance of his thoughts, that he is not only a polite scholar, but a man of extensive and profound erudition. I was forcibly struck with a short yet beautiful character, which he drew of your learned and amiable countryman, Sir Robert Boyle : he spoke of him, as if "his noble mind had, even before death, divested itself of all influence from his frail tabernacle of flesh ;" and called him, in his peculiarly emphatic and impressive manner, "a pure intelligence ; the link between men and angels."

15. This man has been before my imagination almost ever since. A thousand times, as I rode along, I dropped the reins of my bridle, stretched forth my hand, and tried to imitate his quotation from Rousseau : a thousand times I abandoned the attempt in despair, and felt persuaded, that his peculiar manner and power arose from an energy of soul, which nature could give, but which no human being could justly copy. As I recall, at this moment, several of his awfully striking attitudes, the chilling tide, with which my blood begins to pour along my arteries, reminds me of the emotions produced by the first sight of Gray's introductory picture of his Bard.

QUESTIONS.—Can you describe the personal appearance of the blind preacher? 2. What effect was produced by his manner? 3. What by his language? 4. When he described the character and conduct of Christ, what was the effect on the congregation? 5. What effect was produced by the circumstance of his blindness? 6. What was the secret of the preacher's great power?

ERRORS.—hos-ses for hors-es; jine for join; en-trin' for en-ter-ing.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—2. congregation, preternatural, shriveled, ascertained; 3. veneration, administration; 4. symbols; 5. enunciation; 6. distortions, indignation, involuntarily, convulsively; 7. obstructed, handkerchief, inconceivable; 8. fallacious, enthusiastic; 11. melancholy, tremulous.

LESSON LXVIII

RULE.—Where two or more consonants come together, let the pupil be careful to sound every one distinctly.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE.

Thou indulged'st thy appetite.
O wind! that waft'st us o'er the main.
Thou tempted'st him.
Thou loved'st him fondly.
Thou credited'st his story.
The lists are open.

Apostrophe to Light.—MILTON.

1. Hail! holy Light, offspring of Heaven first born,
Or of the eternal co-eternal beam,
May I express thee unblamed? Since God is light,
And never but in unapproached light
5. Dwelt from eternity, dwelt then in thee,
Bright effluence of bright essence increate,
Or hear'st thou, rather, pure ethereal stream,
Whose fountain who shall tell? Before the sun,
Before the heavens, thou wert, and at the voice
10. Of God, as with a mantle, didst invest
The rising world of waters dark and deep,
Won from the void and formless infinite

Thou I revisit now with bolder wing,
Escaped the Stygian pool, though long detained

15. In that obscure sojourn, while in my flight,
Through utter and through middle darkness borne
With other notes than to the Orphean lyre
I sung of chaos and eternal night.
Taught by the heavenly muse to venture down
20. The dark descent, and up to reascend,
Though hard and rare ; Thee I revisit safe,
And feel thy sovereign, vital lamp ; but thou
Revisit'st not these eyes, that roll in vain,
To find thy piercing ray, and find no dawn ;
25. So thick a drop serene hath quenched their orbs,
Or dim suffusion veiled. Yet not the more
Cease I to wander where the muses haunt,
Clear spring or shady grove, or sunny hill,
Smit with the love of sacred song ; but chief
30. Thee, Sion, and the flowery brooks beneath,
That wash thy hallowed feet, and warbling flow,
Nightly I visit : nor sometimes forget
Those other two, equaled with me in fate,
So were I equaled with them in renown,
35. Blind Thamyras and blind Mæonides,
And Tyresias and Phineas, prophets old :
Then feed on thoughts that voluntary move
Harmonious numbers ; as the wakeful bird
Sings darkling, and in shadiest covert hid,
40. Tunes her nocturnal note. Thus with the year,
Seasons return, but not to me returns
Day, or the sweet approach of even and morn ;
Or sight of vernal bloom, or summer's rose,
Or flocks, or herds, or human face divine ;
45. But cloud, instead, and ever-during dark
Surrounds me, from the cheerful ways of men
Cut off, and for the book of knowledge fair,
Presented with a universal blank
Of nature's works, to me expunged and razed,
50. And wisdom, at one entrance, quite shut out.
So much the rather thou, celestial Light,
Shine inward, and the mind through all her powers
Irradiate : there plant eyes, all mist from thence Purge and disperse, that I may see and tell
Of things invisible to mortal sight.

QUESTIONS.—1. Why does Milton mention light so reverently ? 2. What was the Stygian pool ? 3. Orphean lyre ? 4. Was Milton blind ? 5. What bird does he call the "wakeful bird ?"

ERRORS.—fust for first ; 'spress for ex-press ; up-proach for ap-proach.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—2. co-eternal ; 6. increate ; 7. ethereal ; 12. infinite ; 18. chaos ; 20. reascend ; 21. suffusion ; 39. darkling ; 40. nocturnal ; 49. expunged ; 53. irradiate.

LESSON LXIX.

RULE.—When you look at persons to whom you are reading, look at them as you would if you were talking to them.

Procrastination.—YOUNG.

1. Be wise to day ; 'tis madness to defer ;
Next day the fatal precedent will plead,
Thus on, till wisdom is pushed out of life ;
Procrastination is the thief of time ;
5. Year after year it steals, till all are fled,
And to the mercies of a moment leaves
The vast concerns of an eternal scene.
If not so frequent, would not this be strange ?
That 'tis so frequent, this is stranger still.
10. Of man's miraculous mistakes, this bears
The palm, that all men are about to live,
Forever on the brink of being born.
All pay themselves the compliment to think
They one day shall not drivel ; and their pride
15. On this reversion takes up ready praise,
At least their own : their future selves applaud ;
How excellent that life they ne'er will lead !
Time lodged in their own hands is folly's vails ;
That lodged in fate's, to wisdom they consign :
20. The thing they can't but purpose, they postpone ;
'Tis not in folly, not to scorn a fool ;
And scarce in human wisdom, to do more.
All promise is poor dilatory man,
And that through every stage : when young, indeed,
25. In full content we sometimes nobly rest
Unanxious for ourselves ; and only wish,
As duteous sons, our fathers were more wise.
At thirty man suspects himself a fool ;
Knows it at forty, and reforms his plan ;
30. At fifty chides his infamous delay,
Pushes his prudent purpose to resolve ;
In all the magnanimity of thought
Resolves ; and re-resolves ; then dies the same.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is meant by procrastination ? 2. Name some of the evils of procrastination. 3. What is the meaning of lines 11 and 12 ? 4. What, of all things, are men most disposed to defer ? 5. What did the ancients regard as the best kind of knowledge ?

ERRORS.—pre-ce-dent for prec-e-dent ; mir-ac'-lous for mir-ac-u-lous ; com-plum-munt for com-pli-ment ; ex-ce-lent for ex-cel-lent.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. defer ; 2. precedent ; 7. eternal, scene ; 10. miraculous ; 13. compliment ; 14. drivel ; 15. reversion ; 16. applaud ; 19. consign ; 20. postpone ; 23. dilatory ; 26. unanxious ; 27. duteous ; 30. infamous ; 32. magnanimity ; 33. re-resolves.

LESSON LXX.

RULE.—Let the pupil stand at as great a distance from the teacher as possible, and then try to read so loud and distinctly that the teacher may hear each syllable.

America.—PHILLIPS.

1. I appeal to History! Tell me, thou reverend chronicler of the grave, can all the illusions of ambition realized, can all the wealth of a universal commerce, can all the achievements of successful heroism, or all the establishments of this world's wisdom, secure to empire the permanency of its possessions? Alas! Troy thought so once; yet the land of Priam lives only in song!

2. Thebes thought so once; yet her hundred gates have crumbled, and her very tombs are as the dust they were vainly intended to commemorate! So thought Palmyra—yet where is she? So thought the countries of Demosthenes and the Spartan; yet Leonidas is trampled by the timid slave, and Athens insulted by the servile, mindless and enervate Ottoman!

3. In his hurried march, Time has but looked at their imagined immortality; and all its vanities, from the palace to the tomb, have, with their ruins, erased the very impression of his footsteps! The days of their glory are as if they had never been; and the island, that was then a speck, rude and neglected in the barren ocean, now rivals the ubiquity of their commerce, the glory of their arms, the fame of their philosophy, the eloquence of their senate, and the inspiration of their bards!

4. Who shall say, then, contemplating the past, that England, proud and potent as she appears, may not, one day, be what Athens is, and the young America yet soar to be what Athens was! Who shall say, that, when the European column shall have mouldered, and the night of barbarism obscured its very ruins, that mighty continent may not emerge from the horizon to rule, for its time, sovereign of the ascendant! * *

5. Sir, it matters very little what immediate spot may have been the birthplace of such a man as WASHINGTON. No people can claim, no country can appropriate him. The boon of Providence to the human race, his fame is eternity, and his residence creation. Though it was the defeat of our arms, and the disgrace of our policy, I almost bless the convulsion in which he had his origin.

6. If the heavens thundered, and the earth rocked, yet, when the storm had passed, how pure was the climate that it cleared! how bright, in the brow of the firmament, was the planet which it revealed to us! In the production of Washington, it does really appear as if Nature was endeavoring to improve upon herself, and that all the virtues of the ancient world were but so many studies preparatory to the patriot of the new.

7. Individual instances, no doubt, there were, splendid exemplifications, of some singular qualification: Cæsar was merciful, Scipio was continent, Hannibal was patient; but it was reserved for Washington to blend them all in one, and, like the lovely masterpiece of the Grecian artist, to exhibit, in one glow of associated beauty, the pride of every model, and the perfection of every master.

8. As a general, he marshaled the peasant into a veteran, and supplied by discipline the absence of experience; as a statesman, he enlarged the policy of the cabinet into the most comprehensive system of general advantage; and such was the wisdom of his views, and the philosophy of his counsels, that, to the soldier and the statesman, he almost added the character of the sage!

9. A conqueror, he was untainted with the crime of blood; a revolutionist, he was free from any stain of treason; for aggression commenced the contest, and his country called him to the command. Liberty unsheathed his sword, necessity stained, victory returned it. If he had paused here, history might have doubted what station to assign him, whether at the head of her citizens, or her soldiers, her heroes, or her patriots. But the last glorious act crowns his career, and banishes all hesitation.

10. Who like Washington, after having emancipated a hemisphere, resigned its crown, and preferred the retirement of domestic life to the adoration of a land he might be said almost to have created!

11. Happy, proud America! The lightnings of heaven yielded to your philosophy! The temptations of earth could not seduce your patriotism!

QUESTIONS.—1. What is the testimony of history on the permanence of national greatness? 2. What is said of the character of Washington? 3. How does he compare with Cæsar, Scipio, Hannibal, Bonaparte?

ERRORS.—his-try for his-to-ry; en'-er-vate for en-er'-vate; Le-on-a-das for Le-on-i-das.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. chronicler, achievements, establishments, permanency; 2. crumbled, commemorate, enervate; 3. immortality, impression; 4. contemplating, emerge, ascendant; 5. appropriate, convulsion; 6. first, endeavoring, preparatory; 7. marshaled, discipline, command; 8. revolutionist, aggression; 9. hemisphere, patriotism.

LESSON LXXI.

RULE.—Avoid reading in a monotonous way, as if you were ~~not~~ interested and did not understand what is read.

Thirsting after Righteousness.—BIBLE.

1. As the heart panteth after the water brooks,
 So panteth my soul after thee, O God!
 My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God:
 When shall I come and appear before God?
 My tears have been my meat day and night,
 While they continually say unto me, Where is thy God?
 When I remember these things, I pour out my soul in me:
 For I had gone with the multitude, I went with them to the
 With the voice of joy and praise, [house of God,
 With a multitude that kept holy-day.
2. Why art thou cast down, O my soul?
 And why art thou disquieted within me?
 Hope thou in God:—for I shall yet praise him
 For the help of his countenance.
3. O my God! my soul is cast down within me:
 Therefore will I remember thee from the land of Jordan, and
 From the hill Mizar. [of the Hermonites,
 Deep calleth unto deep, at the noise of thy water-spouts;
 All thy waves and thy billows are gone over me!
 Yet the Lord will command his loving kindness in the day time,
 And in the night his song shall be with me,
 And my prayer unto the God of my life.
4. I will say unto God my rock, Why hast thou forgotten me?
 Why go I mourning, because of the oppression of the enemy?
 As with a sword in my bones, mine enemies reproach me;
 While they say daily unto me, Where is thy God?
5. Why art thou cast down, O my soul?
 And why art thou disquieted within me?
 Hope thou in God:—for I will yet praise him,
 Who is the health of my countenance, and my God.

QUESTIONS.—1. From 1st to 7th line, what feeling is described? 2. To whom are the 2d and 4th verses addressed? 3. Under what circumstances was this psalm written?

ERRORS.—ar-ter for after; con-tin-i-al-ly for con-tin-u-al-ly; sord for sword.

LESSON LXXII.

RULE.—Be careful not to read in a faint and low tone.

View from Mount Etna.—LONDON ENCYC.

1. The man who treads Mount Etna, seems like a man above the world. He generally is advised to ascend before daybreak; the stars now brighten, shining like so many gems of flames; others appear which were invisible below. The milky-way seems like a pure flake of light, lying across the firmament, and it is the opinion of some that the satellites of Jupiter might be discovered by the naked eye.

2. But when the sun arises, the prospect from the summit of Etna is beyond comparison the finest in nature. The eye rolls over it with astonishment and is lost. The diversity of objects; the extent of the horizon; the immense height; the country like a map at our feet; the ocean around; the heavens above; all conspire to overwhelm the mind, and affect it.

3. We must be allowed to extract Mr. Brydone's description of this scene. "There is not," he says, "on the surface of the globe, any one point that unites so many awful and sublime objects. The immense elevation from the surface of the earth, drawn as it were to a single point, without any neighboring mountain for the senses and imagination to rest upon and recover from their astonishment, in their way down to the world.

4. "This point or pinnacle, raised on the brink of a bottomless gulf, as old as the world, often discharges rivers of fire, and throws out burning rocks, with a noise that shakes the whole island. Add to this the unbounded extent of the prospect, comprehending the greatest diversity, and the most beautiful scenery in nature, with the rising sun advancing in the east, to illuminate the wondrous scene.

5. "The whole atmosphere by degrees kindles up, and shows dimly and faintly the boundless prospect around. Both sea and land appear dark and confused, as if only emerging from their original chaos, and light and darkness seem still undivided; till the morning, by degrees advancing, completes the separation. The stars are extinguished, and the shades disappear.

6. "The forests, which but just now seemed black, and bottomless gulfs, from whence no ray was reflected to show their form or colors, appear a new creation rising to sight, catching life and beauty from every increasing beam. The scene still enlarges, and the horizon seems to widen and expand itself on all sides; till the sun, like the great Creator, appears in the east, and with his plastic ray completes the mighty scene.

7. "All appears enchantment: and it is with difficulty we can believe we are still on earth. The senses, unaccustomed to the sublimity of such a scene, are bewildered and confounded; and it is not till after some time, that they are capable of separating and judging of the objects that compose it.

8. "The body of the sun is seen rising from the ocean, immense tracts both of sea and land intervening; the islands of Lipari, Panari, Alicudi, Strombolo, and Volcano, with their smoking summits, appear under your feet; and you look down on the whole of Sicily as on a map; and can trace every river through all its windings, from its source to its mouth.

9. "The view is absolutely boundless on every side; nor is there any one object within the circle of vision to interrupt it, so that the sight is every where lost in the immensity; and I am persuaded, it is only from the imperfection of our organs, that the coasts of Africa, and even of Greece, are not discovered, as they are certainly above the horizon. The circumference of the visible horizon on the top of Etna, cannot be less than two thousand miles.

10. "At Malta, which is near two hundred miles distant they perceive all the eruptions from the second region: and that island is often discovered from about one half the elevation of the mountain: so that, at the whole elevation the horizon must extend to near double that distance, or four hundred miles, which makes eight hundred miles for the diameter of the circle, and two thousand four hundred for the circumference! But this is by much too vast for our senses. They are not intended to grasp so boundless a scene.

11. "The most beautiful part of the scene is certainly the mountain itself, the island of Sicily, and the numerous islands lying round it. All these, by a kind of magic in vision, that I am at a loss to account for, seem as if they were brought close round the skirts of Etna; the distances appearing reduced to nothing.

12. "Perhaps this singular effect is produced by the rays of light passing from a rarer medium into a denser, which, (from a well-known law in optics,) to an observer in the rare medium, appears to lift up objects that are at the bottom of the dense one, as a piece of money placed in a basin appears lifted up as soon as the basin is filled with water.

13. "The Regione Deserta, of the frigid zone of Etna, is the first object that calls your attention. It is marked out by a circle of snow and ice, which extends on all sides to the distance of about eight miles. In the center of this circle, the great crater of the mountain rears its burning head, and the regions of intense cold, and of intense heat, seem forever to be united in the same point.

14. "The Regione Deserta is immediately succeeded by the Sylvosa, or the woody region, which forms a circle or girdle of the most beautiful green, which surrounds the mountain on all sides, and is certainly one of the most delightful spots on earth."

QUESTIONS.—1. Where is Mount Etna? 2. Describe the journey you would take to go to it. 3. What is Mount Etna? 4. What is a volcano? 5. Are there any volcanoes in the United States? 6. When are travelers advised to ascend Mount Etna? 7. Describe the appearance of things at that time, and afterwards till sunrise? 8. How far can you see from the summit of Mount Etna? 9. Why cannot the shores of Africa and of Greece be seen from the top of Etna? 10. What is meant by saying (9) "as they are certainly above the horizon?" 11. How many miles does the circumference of vision embrace from the top of Etna? 12. Suppose you were at the top of the mountain, what different regions or kinds of country would you pass through before you would reach the bottom? 13. What islands are near Etna? 14. What cities? 15. If the country about Etna be so very delightful, would you not like to live there? 16. Why? [This question is intended to elicit a comparison of our own with foreign countries, both in point of natural scenery and civil institutions.]

ERRORS.—gen-er-ly for gen-er-al-ly; hor-ri-zon for ho-ri-zon; grand-er for grand-eur; Et-ny for Et-na; Si-pa-ri pronounce Sce-pah-ree; Pa-na-ri pronounce Pah-nah-ree; Al-i-cu-di pronounce Ah-lee-coo-dee.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. ascend, satellites, firmament, invisible; 2. diversity, horizon, grandeur; 3. astonishment; 4. pinnacle, comprehending, wondrous; 5. atmosphere, emerging, chaos, extinguished; 6. plastic; 7. unaccustomed, sublimity, bewildered; 8. intervening; 9. circumference; 10. diameter.

LESSON LXXIII.

RULE.—Be careful to speak little words, such as a, in, at, on, to, by, etc., very distinctly, and yet not to dwell on them so long as on the more important words.

Sublime Virtues Inconsistent with Infidelity.

ROBERT HALL.

1. Infidelity is a soil as barren of great and sublime virtues as it is prolific in crimes. By great and sublime virtues are meant, those which are called into action on great and trying occasions, which demand the sacrifice of the dearest interests and prospects of human life, and sometimes life itself; the virtues, in a word, which, by their rarity and splendor, draw admiration, and have rendered illustrious the characters of patriots, martyrs, and confessors. It requires but little reflection to perceive, that whatever veils a future world, and contracts the limits of existence within the present life, must tend, in a proportionable degree, to diminish the grandeur and narrow the sphere of human agency.

2. As well might you expect exalted sentiments of justice from a professed gamester, as look for noble principles in the man whose hopes and fears are all suspended on the present moment, and who stakes the whole happiness of his being on the events of this vain and fleeting life.

3. If he be ever impelled to the performance of great achievements in a good cause, it must be solely by the hope of fame; a motive which, besides that it makes virtue the servant of opinion, usually grows weaker at the approach of death; and which, however it may surmount the love of existence in the heat of battle, or in the moment of public observation, can seldom be expected to operate with much force on the retired duties of a private station.

4. In affirming that infidelity is unfavorable to the higher class of virtues, we are supported as well by facts as by reason. We should be sorry to load our adversaries with unmerited reproach; but to what history, to what record will they appeal for the traits of moral greatness exhibited by their disciples? Where shall we look for the trophies of infidel magnanimity or atheistical virtue? Not that we mean to accuse them of inactivity; they have recently filled the world with the fame of their exploits—exploits of a different kind, indeed, but of imperishable memory and disastrous luster.

5. Though great and splendid actions are not the ordinary employments of life, but must from their nature, be reserved for high and eminent occasions; yet that system is essentially defective which leaves no room for their production. They are important, both from their immediate advantage and their remoter influence. They often save, and always illustrate, the age and nation in which they appear. They raise the standard of morals; they arrest the progress of degeneracy; they diffuse a luster over the path of life.

6. Monuments of the greatness of the human soul, they present to the world the august image of virtue in her sublimest form, from which streams of light and glory issue to remote times and ages; while their commemoration, by the pen of historians and poets, awakens in distant bosoms the sparks of kindred excellence.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is meant by infidelity? 2. Are all infidels profane or immoral men? 3. Do they possess great and sublime virtues? 4. What is meant by great and sublime virtues? 5. To what is the infidel compared in paragraph 2d? 6. Is the comparison just? 7. Do infidels possess no good qualities? 8. Perform no good actions? 9. What motive impels them ever to do good? 10. What is said of this motive? 11. What is the testimony of history on this point?

ERRORS.—in-i'terests for in-ter-ests; gran-der for grand-eur; 'u-man for hu-man; il-lus-trous for il-lus-tri-ous; mon-i-ment for mon-u-ment.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. infidelity, prolific, illustrious, proportionable, grandeur; 2. sentiments, gamester, suspended; 3. achievements, approach; 4. unfavorable, adversaries, exhibited, disciples, magnanimity, atheistical, imperishable, disastrous; 5. employment, essentially, production, immediate, remoter, degeneracy; 6. monuments, august, commemoration.

LESSON LXXIV.

RULE.—In reading poetry, be careful to avoid the sing-song tone which is made by marking too strongly with the voice, all the accented syllables. In the example the fault will appear, if the words italicised are strongly accented.

EXAMPLE.—Sweet is the work my God and King
To praise thy name, give thanks and sing.

The Alps.—W. GAYLORD CLARK.

1. Proud monuments of God! sublime ye stand
 Among the wonders of his mighty hand:
 With summits soaring in the upper sky,
 Where the broad day looks down with burning eye;
 Where gorgeous clouds in solemn pomp repose,
 Flinging rich shadows on eternal snows:
 Piles of triumphant dust, ye stand alone,
 And hold, in kingly state, a peerless throne!
2. Like olden conquerors, on high ye rear
 The regal ensign, and the glittering spear:
 Round icy spires the mists, in wreaths unrolled,
 Float ever near, in purple or in gold:
 And voiceful torrents, sternly rolling there,
 Fill with wild music the unpillared air:
 What garden, or what hall on earth beneath,
 Thrills to such tones, as o'er the mountains breathe?
3. There, though long ages past, those summits shone
 When morning radiance on their state was thrown;
 There, when the summer day's career was done,
 Played the last glory of the sinking sun;
 There, sprinkling luster o'er the cataract's shade,
 The chastened moon her glittering rainbow made;
 And blent with pictured stars, her luster lay,
 Where to still vales the free streams leaped away.
4. Where are the thronging hosts of other days,
 Whose banners floated o'er the Alpine ways;
 Who, through their high defiles, to battle, wound,
 While deadly ordnance stirred the heights around?
 Gone; like the dream that melts at early morn,
 When the lark's anthem through the sky is borne:
 Gone; like the wrecks that sink in ocean's spray,
 And chill Oblivion murmurs, Where are they?
5. Yet "Alps on Alps" still rise; the lofty home
 Of storms and eagles, where their pinions roam;
 Still roam their peaks and magic colors lie,
 Of morn and eve, imprinted on the sky;

And still, while kings and thrones shall fade and fall,
And empty crowns lie dim upon the pall;
Still shall their glaciers flash, their torrents roar,
Till kingdoms fail, and nations rise no more.

QUESTIONS.—1. In verse 1, what is the meaning of “piles of triumphant dust?” 2. What is an “anthem?” (verse 4) 3. And especially what is a “lark’s anthem?” 4. What hosts are referred to in verse 4th, as crossing the Alps?

ERRORS.—glaz-iers and glashers for gla-ci-ers (pronounced glas-shez); pic-ter’d for pic-tur’d.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. monuments, gorgeous, flinging, triumphant, peerless; 2. olden, ensign, voiceful, unpillared; 3. sprinkling, cataracts; 4. ordnance, oblivion, murmurs; 5. glaciers.

Parallel between Pope and Dryden.

JOHNSON.

1. POPE professed to have learned his poetry from Dryden, whom, whenever an opportunity was presented, he praised through his whole life with unvaried liberality; and perhaps his character may receive some illustration, if he be compared with his master.

2. Integrity of understanding, and nicety of discernment, were not allotted in a less proportion to Dryden than to Pope. The rectitude of Dryden’s mind was sufficiently shown by the dismissal of his poetical prejudices, and the rejection of unnatural thoughts and rugged numbers. But Dryden never desired to apply all the judgment that he had. He wrote and professed to write, merely for the people; and when he pleased others, he contented himself. He spent no time in struggles to rouse latent powers; he never attempted to make that better which was already good, nor often to mend what he must have known to be faulty. He wrote, as he tells us with very little consideration: when occasion or necessity called upon him, he poured out what the present moment happened to supply, and, when once it had passed the press, ejected it from his mind; for, when he had no pecuniary interest, he had no further solicitude.

3. Pope was not content to satisfy; he desired to excel, and therefore always endeavored to do his best; he did not court the candor, but dared the judgment of his reader, and, expecting no indulgence from others, he showed none to himself. He examined lines and words with minute and punctilious observation, and retouched every part with indefatigable diligence, till he had left nothing to be forgiven.

4. For this reason he kept his pieces very long in his hands, while he considered and reconsidered them. The only poems which can be supposed to have been written with such regard to the times as might hasten their publication, were the two satires of Thirty-eight: of which Dodsley told me, that they were brought to him by the author, that they might be fairly copied. "Every line," said he, "was then written twice over; I gave him a clean transcript, which he sent sometime afterwards to me for the press, with every line written twice over a second time."

5. His declaration, that his care for his works ceased at their publication, was not strictly true. His parental attention never abandoned them: what he found amiss in the first edition, he silently corrected in those that followed. He appears to have revised the Iliad, and freed it from some of its imperfections; and the Essay on Criticism received many improvements after its first appearance. It will seldom be found that he altered without adding clearness, elegance, or vigor. Pope had perhaps the judgment of Dryden; but Dryden certainly wanted the diligence of Pope.

6. In acquired knowledge, the superiority must be allowed to Dryden, whose education was more scholastic, and who, before he became an author, had been allowed more time for study, with better means of information. His mind has a larger range, and he collects his images and illustrations from a more extensive circumference of science. Dryden knew more of man in his general nature, and Pope in his local manners. The notions of Dryden were formed by comprehensive speculation, and those of Pope by minute attention. There is more dignity in the knowledge of Dryden, and more certainty in that of Pope.

7. Poetry was not the sole praise of either; for both excelled likewise in prose; but Pope did not borrow his prose from his predecessor. The style of Dryden is capricious and varied ; that of Pope is cautious and uniform. Dryden obeys the motions of his own mind ; Pope constrains his mind to his own rules of composition. Dryden is sometimes vehement and rapid ; Pope is always smooth, uniform, and gentle. Dryden's page is a natural field, rising into inequalities, and diversified by the varied exuberance of abundant vegetation ; Pope's is a velvet lawn, shaven by the sithe and leveled by the roller.

8. Of genius, that power which constitutes a poet ; that quality without which judgment is cold, and knowledge is inert ; that energy which collects, combines, amplifies, and animates ; the superiority must, with some hesitation, be allowed to Dryden. It must not be inferred, that of this poetical vigor Pope had only a little, because Dryden had more ; for every other writer since Milton must give place to Pope : and even of Dryden it must be said that if he has brighter paragraphs, he has not better poems.

9. Dryden's performances were always hasty, either excited by some external occasion or extorted by domestic necessity ; he composed without consideration, and published without correction. What his mind could supply at call, or gather in one excursion, was all that he sought, and all that he gave. The dilatory caution of Pope enabled him to condense his sentiments, to multiply his images, and to accumulate all that study might produce, or chance might supply. If the flights of Dryden, therefore, are higher, Pope continues longer on the wing. If the blaze of Dryden's fire is brighter, the heat of Pope's is more regular and constant. Dryden often surpasses expectation, and Pope never falls below it. Dryden is read with frequent astonishment, and Pope with perpetual delight.

10. This parallel will, I hope, when it is well considered, be found just ; and if the reader should suspect me, as I suspect myself, of some partial fondness for the memory of Dryden, let him not too hastily condemn me : for meditation and inquiry may, perhaps, show him the reasonableness of my determination.

QUESTIONS.—1. During whose reigns did Pope and Dryden live ? 2. Did Dryden labor his poems, as did Pope ? 3. Which excelled in native genius ? 4. Which in education ? 5. Can you mention any of the poems of either author ?

ERRORS.—lat-ent for la-tent ; pow-er-ed for pour-ed ; spec-e-la-tion for spec-u-la-tion ; punc-til-ious for punc-til-ious.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. illustration ; 3. punctilious, indefatigable ; 4. transcript ; 7. exuberance ; 8. amplifies ; 9. dilatory.

LESSON LXXVI.

RULE.—When similar sounds come at the end of one word, and at the beginning of the next word, they must not be blended into one.

Happy Consequences of American Independence.—MAXCY.

1. In a full persuasion of the excellency of our government, let us shun those vices which tend to its subversion, and cultivate those virtues which will render it permanent, and transmit it in full vigor to all succeeding ages. Let not the haggard forms of intemperance and luxury ever lift up their destroying visages in this happy country. Let economy, frugality, moderation, and justice at home and abroad, mark the conduct of all our citizens. Let it be our constant care to diffuse knowledge and goodness through all ranks of society.

2. The people of this country will never be uneasy under its present form of government, provided they have sufficient information to judge of its excellency. No nation under heaven enjoys so much happiness as the Americans.

3. Convince them of this, and will they not shudder at the thought of subverting their political constitution, of suffering it to degenerate into aristocracy or monarchy? Let a sense of our happy situation awaken in us the warmest sensations of gratitude to the Supreme Being. Let us consider him as the author of all our blessings, acknowledging him as our beneficent parent, protector, and friend.

4. The predominant tendency of his providences towards us as a nation, evinces his benevolent designs. Every part of his conduct speaks in a language plain and intelligible. Let us open our ears, let us attend, let us be wise.

5. While we celebrate the anniversary of our independence, let us not pass over in silence the defenders of our country. Where are those brave Americans whose lives were cloven down in the tempest of battle? Are they not bending from the bright abodes?

6. A voice from the altar cries, "these are they who loved their country, these are they who died for liberty." We now reap the fruit of their agony and toil. Let their memories be eternally embalmed in our bosoms. Let the infants of all posterity prattle their fame, and drop tears of courage for their fate.

7. The consequences of American independence will soon reach to the extremities of the world. The shining car of freedom will soon roll over the necks of kings, and bear off the oppressed to scenes of liberty and peace. The clamors of war will cease under the whole heaven. The tree of liberty will shoot its top up to the sun. Its boughs will hang over the ends of the whole world, and wearied nations will lie down and rest under its shade.

8. Here in America stands the asylum for the distressed and persecuted of all nations. The vast temple of freedom rises majestically fair. Founded on a rock, it will remain unshaken by the force of tyrants, undiminished by the flight of time. Long streams of light emanate through its portals, and chase the darkness from distant nations. Its turrets will swell into the heavens, rising above every tempest; and the pillar of divine glory, descending from God, will rest for ever on its summit.

QUESTIONS.—1. How does the form of government of the United States, compare with those of all other nations? 2. What is our happiness, compared with that of other nations? 3. What should we do to perpetuate our political institutions?

ERRORS.—ex'-lun-cy for e'x-cel-len-cy; lux-ery for lux-ury; mod-e-ra-shin for mod-e-ra-tion; gov-e-munt for gov-ern-ment; con'stu-tion for con-sti-tution.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. persuasion, excellency, government, subversion, permanent, succeeding, intemperance, economy; 2. information; 3. political, constitution, degenerate, aristocracy, monarchy, acknowledging, beneficent; 4. predominant, providences, intelligible; 5. independence; 7. consequences, extremities; 8. asylum, majestically, undiminished, summit.

RULE.—Let each pupil in the class observe and mention every syllable that is not correctly sounded as each one reads.

Satan and Death at the Gate of Hell.

MILTON.

1. Meanwhile the adversary of God and man,
Satan, with thoughts inflamed of highest design,
Puts on swift wings, and towards the gates of hell
Explores his solitary flight! sometimes
5. He scours the right hand coast, sometimes the left,
Now shaves with level wing the deep, then soars
Up to the fiery concave towering high.
As when far off at sea a fleet descried
Hangs in the clouds, by equinoctial winds

10. Close sailing from Bengala, or the isles
Of Ternate and Tidore, whence merchants bring Their spicy drugs; they, on the trading flood,
Through the wide Ethiopian to the cape,
Ply stemming nightly toward the pole: so seemed 15. Far off the flying fiend. At last appear
Hell's bounds, high reaching to the horrid roof,
And thrice three-fold the gates: three folds were brass,
Three iron, three of adamantine rock
Impenetrable, impaled with circling fire,
20. Yet unconsumed. Before the gates there sat
On either side a formidable shape;
The one seemed woman to the waist, and fair,
But ended foul in many a scaly fold
Voluminous and vast, a serpent armed
25. With mortal sting; about her middle round
A cry of hell-hounds, never ceasing, barked
With wide Cerberean mouths full loud, and rung
A hideous peal. Far less abhorred than these Vexed Scylla, bathing in the sea that parts
30. Calabria from the hoarse Trinacrian shore:
Nor uglier follow the night-hag, when, called
In secret, riding through the air she comes,
Lured with the smell of infant blood, to dance
With Lapland witches, while the laboring moon
35. Eclipses at their charms. The other shape,
If shape it might be called that shape had none
Distinguishable in member, joint, or limb;
Or substance might be called that shadow seemed;
For each seemed either; black it stood as night,
40. Fierce as ten furies, terrible as hell,
And shook a dreadful dart; what seemed his head
The likeness of a kingly crown had on.
Satan was now at hand; and from his seat
The monster moving, onward came as fast
45. With horrid strides; hell trembled as he strode.
The undaunted fiend what this might be admired,
Admired, not feared; God and his Son except,
Created thing nought valued he, nor shunned.
And with disdainful look thus first began.
50. "Whence, and what art thou, execrable shape!
That dar'st, though grim and terrible, advance
Thy miscreated front across my way
To yonder gates? Through them I mean to pass,
That be assured, without leave asked of thee:
55. Retire or taste thy folly; and learn by proof,
Hell-born! not to contend with spirits of heaven!"
To whom the goblin, full of wrath, replied,
Art thou that traitor angel, art thou he,
Who first broke peace in heaven, and faith, till then
60. Unbroken, and in proud rebellious arms
Drew after him the third part of heaven's sons

- Conjured against the highest, for which both thou
And they, outcast from God, are here condemned
To waste eternal days in wo and pain ?
65. And reckonest thou thyself with spirits of heaven,
Hell-doomed ! and breathest defiance here and scorn,
Where I reign king, and, to inflame thee more,
Thy king and lord ! Back to thy punishment,
False fugitive ! and to thy speed add wings,
70. Lest with a whip of scorpions I pursue
Thy lingering, or with one stroke of this dart
Strange horror seize thee, and pangs unfelt before.”
So spake the grisly terror, and in shape,
So speaking and so threatening, grew ten-fold
75. More dreadful and deformed : on the other side,
Incensed with indignation, Satan stood
Unterrified, and like a comet burned,
That fires the length of Ophiuchus huge
In the arctic sky, and from his horrid hair
80. Shakes pestilence and war. Each at the head
Leveled his deadly aim ; their fatal hands
No second stroke intend ; and such a frown
Each cast at the other, as when two black clouds
With heaven’s artillery fraught, come rattling on
85. Over the Caspian, then stand front to front
Hovering a space, till winds the signal blow
To join their dark encounter in mid air :
So frowned the mighty combatants, that hell
Grew darker at their frown ; so matched they stood ;
- 90 For never but once more was either like
To meet so great a foe : and now great deeds
Had been achieved, whereof all hell had rung,
Had not the snaky sorceress, that sat
Fast by hell-gate, and kept the fatal key,
95. Risen, and with hideous outcry, rushed between.

QUESTIONS.—1. What beautiful comparison is there in the first fifteen lines ? 2. Where are Bengala, Ternate, and Tidore ? 3. What is meant by Cerberian mouths ? 4. What is the fable to which allusion is made in line 32—36, &c. 5. Who was the snaky sorceress ? 6. Why is Death represented as the son of Satan and Sin ?

ERRORS.—find for fiend (pronounced feend); tur-ri-ble for ter-ri-ble; shuk for shook; ould for should; und for undaunted (pronounced un-dant-ed).

SPELL AND DEFINE.—4. solitary; 7. concave; 14. stemming; 18. adamant; 19. impaled, impenetrable; 52. miscreated; 73. grisly; 75. distinguishable; 84. fraught; 93. sorceress

LESSON LXXVIII.

RULE.—While each pupil reads, let the rest observe, and then mention which syllables were pronounced wrong, and which were omitted or indistinctly sounded.

Evils of Dismemberment.—WEBSTER.

1. Gentlemen, the political prosperity which this country has attained, and which it now enjoys, it has acquired mainly through the instrumentality of the present government. While this agent continues, the capacity of attaining to still higher degrees of prosperity exists also.

2. We have, while this lasts, a political life, capable of beneficial exertion, with power to resist or overcome misfortunes, to sustain us against the ordinary accidents of human affairs, and to promote, by active efforts, every public interest.

3. But dismemberment strikes at the very being which preserves these faculties. It would lay its rude and ruthless hand on this great agent itself. It would sweep away, not only what we possess, but all power of regaining lost, or acquiring new, possessions.

4. It would leave the country, not only bereft of its prosperity and happiness, but without limbs, and organs, or faculties, by which to exert itself, hereafter, in the pursuit of that prosperity and happiness.

5. Other misfortunes may be borne, or their effects overcome. If disastrous war should sweep our commerce from the ocean, another generation may renew it; if it exhaust our treasury, future industry may replenish it; if it desolate and lay waste our fields, still, under a new cultivation, they will grow green again, and ripen to future harvests.

6. It were but a trifle, even if the walls of yonder capitol were to crumble, if its lofty pillars ^{should} ~~were~~ ^{asked of it} ~~asked of it~~ fall, and its gorgeous decorations be all covered by the dust of the valley. All these might be rebuilt. But who shall re-construct the fabric of demolished government? Who shall rear again the well-proportioned columns of constitutional liberty? Who shall frame together the skillful architecture which unites national sovereignty with state-rights, individual security, and public prosperity?

7. No, gentlemen, if these columns fall, they will be raised not again. Like the Coliseum and the Parthenon, they will be destined to a mournful, a melancholy immortality. Bitterer tears, however, will flow over them, than were ever shed over the monuments of Roman or Grecian art; for they will be the remnants of a more glorious edifice than Greece or Rome ever saw—the edifice of constitutional American liberty.

8. But, gentlemen, let us hope for better things. Let us trust in that gracious Being who has hitherto held our country as in the hollow of his hand. Let us trust to the virtue and the intelligence of the people, and to the efficacy of religious obligation. Let us trust to the influence of Washington's example.

9. Let us hope that that fear of heaven, which expels all other fear, and that regard to duty, which transcends all other regard, may influence public men and private citizens, and lead our country still onward in her happy career. Full of these gratifying anticipations and hopes, let us look forward to the end of that century which is now commenced.

10. And may the disciples of Washington then see, as we now see, the flag of the Union floating on the top of the capitol; and then, as now, may the sun in his course visit no land more free, more happy, more lovely, than this our own country!

QUESTIONS.—1. How was the political prosperity of our country obtained? 2. So long as this government lasts, what will be our situation? 3. What will be the effect of dismemberment? 4. Why would the destruction of our present form of government be an irretrievable loss of liberty? 5. In what is our chief hope for the permanency of our government to be placed?

ERRORS.—gen-tle-mun for gen-tle-men; in-ster-mun-tal-i-ty for instru-men-tal-i-ty; col-lumns for col-umns; ar-chi-tec-ture should be pronounced ark-i-tec-ture.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. instrumentality, government; 2. beneficial, misfortunes; 3. dismemberment, ruthless; 5. disastrous, replenish; 6. gorgeous, decorations, demolished, well-proportioned, constitutional, architecture, sovereignty; 7. Coliseum, Parthenon, melancholy, immortality, constitutional; 9. transcends, anticipations.

LESSON LXXIX.

RULE.—Be careful to pronounce the little words, like a, the, and, in, etc., distinctly, and not to join them to the next word.

No Excellence without Labor.—WIRT.

1. The education, moral and intellectual, of every individual, must be, chiefly, his own work. Rely upon it, that the ancients were right—both in morals and intellect—we give their final shape to our characters, and thus become, emphatically, the architects of our own fortune. How else could it happen, that young men, who have had precisely the same opportunities, should be continually presenting us with such different results, and rushing to such opposite destinies?

2. Difference of talent will not solve it, because that difference is very often in favor of the disappointed candidate. You shall see issuing from the walls of the same college—nay, sometimes from the bosom of the same family—two young men, of whom the one shall be admitted to be a genius of high order, the other, scarcely above the point of mediocrity; yet you shall see the genius sinking and perishing in poverty, obscurity and wretchedness: while on the other hand, you shall observe the mediocre plodding his slow but sure way up the hill of life, gaining steadfast footing at every step, and mounting, at length, to eminence and distinction, an ornament to his family, a blessing to his country,

3. Now, whose work is this? Manifestly their own. They are the architects of their respective fortunes. The best seminary of learning that can open its portals to you, can do no more than to afford you the opportunity of instruction: but it must depend, at last on yourselves, whether you will be instructed or not, or to what point you will push your instruction.

4. And of this be assured—I speak, from observation, a certain truth: THERE IS NO EXCELLENCE WITHOUT GREAT LABOR. It is the fiat of fate from which no power of genius can absolve you.

5. Genius, unexerted, is like the poor moth that flutters around a candle, till it scorches itself to death. If genius be desirable at all, it is only of that great and magnanimous kind, which, like the condor of South America, pitches from the summit of Chimborazo, above the clouds, and sustains itself, at pleasure, in that empyreal region, with an energy rather invigorated than weakened by the effort.

6. It is this capacity for high and long-continued exertion—this vigorous power of profound and searching investigation—this careering and wide-spreading comprehension of mind—and those long reaches of thought, that “Pluck bright honor from the pale-faced moon,

Or dive into the bottom of the deep,
Where fathom line could never touch the ground,
And drag up drowned honor by the locks—”

7. This is the prowess, and these the hardy achievements, which are to enrol your names among the great men of the earth.

QUESTIONS.—1. What did the ancients say in respect to education ?
2. How does it appear from facts, that it is labor rather than genius which gives eminence ?

ERRORS.—in-tel-lec-too-ul and in-tel-lec-chew-el for in-tel-lect-u-al ;
cun-tin-e-al-ly for con-tin-u-al-ly ; 'nor-na-munt for an or-na-ment ; em-pir'-e-al for em-py-re'-al.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. intellectual, individual, ancients, emphatically, architects, continually ; 2. disappointed, obscurity, wretchedness, mediocre ; 3. manifestly, respective, opportunity, instruction ; 4. excellence ; 5. magnanimous, empyreal, invigorated, investigation, comprehension, profound ; 7. achievements.

LESSON LXXX.

RULE.—In reading poetry that does not rhyme, there should be no pause at the end of a line, except when it terminates with an important word, or the sense requires it.

Thoughts in a Place of Public Worship.

HANNAH MORE.

1. And here we come and sit, time after time,
And call it social worship ; Is it thus ?
Oh thou ! whose searching all pervading eye
Scans every secret movement of the heart,
5. And sees us as we are, why mourns my soul
On these occasions ? Why so dead and cold
My best affections ? I have found thee, oft
In my more secret seasons, in the field,
And in my chamber : even in the stir

10. Of outward occupations has my mind
Been drawn to thee, and found thy presence life:
But here I seek in vain, and rarely find
Thy ancient promise to the few that wait
In singleness upon thee, reach to us.
15. Most sweet it is to feel the unity
Of soul-cementing love, gathering in one,
Flowing from heart to heart, and like a cloud
Of mingled incense rising to the throne
Of love itself! then much of heaven is felt
20. By minds drawn thitherward, and closely linked
In the celestial union; 'tis in this
Sweet element alone, that we can live
To any purpose, or expect our minds
Clothed with that covering which alone prepares
25. For social worship. Therefore mourns my soul
In secret, and like one amidst the vast
And widely peopled earth would seek to hide
Myself and sorrows from the motly crowd
Of human observation. But Oh, thou
30. Whose bowels of compassion never fail
Towards the creatures fashioned by thy hand,
Reanimate the dead! and give to those
Who never felt thy presence in their souls
Nor saw thy beauty, both to see and feel
35. That thou art lovely, and thy presence life:
Restore the wanderer, and support the weak
With thy sustaining arm, for strength is thine.
And Oh! preserve this tempest-beaten bark
From sinking in the wave, whose swelling surge
40. Threatens to overwhelm; forsake her not
But be her Pilot, though no sun nor star
Appear amid the gloom; for if a ray
From thy all cheering presence light her course,
She rides the storm secure, and in due time
Will reach her destined port, and be at peace.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is “blank verse?” 2. How many feet are there to a line in blank verse? 3. What is a foot? 4. What feeling is most necessary to social worship? 5. What is the petition offered in the last ten lines? 6. What is a “figure of speech?” 7. Is there one in this lesson? 8. Where?

ERRORS.—set for sit; wush-ip for wor-ship; ex-pict and ex-peck for expect.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—14. singleness; 16. cementing; 21. celestial; 22. element; 24. prepares; 27. peopled; 29. observation; 30. compassion, bowels; 36. wanderer, restore; 37. sustaining; 39. surge; 41. pilot; 45. destined.

LESSON LXXXI.

RULE.—Give a full and distinct sound to all the consonant sounds.

A Plea for Common Schools.—SAML. LEWIS.

1. In rising to address an assembly at the seat of government of the state of Ohio, on the subject of education, I cannot but recur to the times when I first heard of the beautiful rivers and plains of the West. My earliest recollections are associated with the glowing pictures that were drawn of the immense advantages that must result to all that would help to people this new state. When not more than eight years of age, and in the neighborhood of that spot, rendered almost sacred by the landing of the pilgrims nearly two hundred years before, I stood and listened, with all the curiosity of a child, to the questions of parents, grand parents and neighbors, put to those who pretended to know any thing relating to this then almost heathen land.

2. You all recollect how highly this country was spoken of, and the most glowing panegyric was always finished by giving positive assurance that provision, the most ample, was made to educate the children of the rising state. I well recollect that this was considered one of its greatest advantages; and parents, who proposed to emigrate, were more particular in their inquiries on this than on any other subject.

3. I will add, that nothing did more to secure an early sale and settlement of the lands of government than the appropriations for schools; and I more than once heard the resolute but affectionate mother, when surrounded by friends dissuading her from emigration, assign it as a sufficient inducement to go to the far west, "My children will there be entitled to education as well as the children of the rich." And with that ambition to see their children elevated, which only such mothers feel, did many a young mother tear herself from parents, brothers, sisters, and the home of her youth, and with only her husband and weeping children, throw herself into this valley, to realize those hopes that had been inspired by government and the agents of different land companies.

4. To what extent these hopes, so far as education is concerned, have been realized, you all know. And here let me contradict, in the most positive manner, the assertion so often made by the older states, that the general government has been liberal to this and the other western states in educational endowments. Ohio has never received the first farthing in money, nor the first acre of land from this source, as a donation for educational purposes. True, there was a vast tract of uncultivated land owned by government, which she desired to sell; and to do this she had to devise some plan that would allure men to the purchase; she accordingly assigned a certain portion for education—but she did not give it—it was a part of the consideration paid—the very same plan adopted by men who laid out new towns—they gave away a part to secure a sale of the residue; and no part of the immense public domain has ever brought into the treasury so great a return as that devoted to schools.

5. But the impression that ample provision was made, became so general and remained so long, that for years our legislature omitted all action on the subject; and to this cause alone do I attribute what would, otherwise, seem to be an unpardonable neglect. Many subjects, important in themselves, have claimed the attention of those who have, from time to time, been called to legislate for us; and where so much was to be done, and in so short a time, it is not strange that some things have been overlooked: it is indeed wonderful that so much has been accomplished.

6. Our state, instead of requiring centuries to gain a standing among her elder sisters, has passed, almost by magic, from infancy to maturity. To maturity, did I say! Look at the gigantic plans of improvement just begun, and those in contemplation; look at your immense facilities for agriculture, manufactures, and commerce; and, above all, look at the enterprise and public spirit manifested throughout your state. With all these in view, instead of saying that Ohio is at her maturity, must we not exclaim that she has just entered upon youth with all her energies—but that in her very youth she is greater than states and nations were wont to be in maturity?

7. We have not attained this exalted place without incurring corresponding responsibilities to the world and to posterity; and among these responsibilities, none rests with greater weight than our obligation to educate the rising generation. In this sentiment all will doubtless agree; and, leaving to others to excuse themselves and hold back the general cause on the plea of hostility in the people—I venture to affirm that there is no subject which, if properly presented, would find greater favor with our citizens than the subject of general education.

8. After a residence of more than twenty years in this state, and observing public sentiment with some care, I affirm that I have never seen twenty men who would for themselves oppose a system of general instruction, adapted to the wants of the community. I have heard some professed friends of common schools express fears that others would not sustain an improvement of the system; and I have heard those to whose care the schools were entrusted, excuse themselves from taking measures to meet the demands of the community, by casting on that community the reproach of hostility: but I am much mistaken if, on a direct appeal to the people, by cities and townships, there would be found one town in ten that would not sustain the most efficient measures.

9. Patronize education, establish common schools, and sustain them well, and you will, most assuredly, provide a place where all classes will, in childhood, become familiar, before the influence of pride, wealth, and family, can bias the mind. An acquaintance, thus formed, will last as long as life itself. Take fifty lads in a neighborhood, including rich and poor—send them in childhood to the same school—let them join in the same sports, read and spell in the same classes, until their different circumstances fix their business for life: some go to the field, some to the mechanic's shop, some to their merchandize: one becomes eminent at the bar, another in the pulpit: some become wealthy; the majority live on with a mere competency—a few are reduced to beggary!

10. But let the most eloquent orator that ever harangued a popular assembly, attempt to prejudice the minds of one part against the other—and so far from succeeding, the poorest of the whole would consider himself insulted, and from his own knowledge stand up in defence of his more fortunate schoolmate. I appeal to all who hear me, if the ties of friendship formed at school have not outlived every other, where relationship did not exist? Can the oldest man in this assembly meet the schoolmate of by-gone days without feelings that almost hallow the greeting? And these are the feelings that I would, by common schools, establish in the bosoms of every son and daughter of Ohio. Distinction will soon enough find its way into society from considerations of wealth and influence: it should be the duty of our legislature to provide an antidote against all its evil consequences. Now, you have the power. Now, your state is American in all its feelings. Wait not until those who are hostile to such a measure are able to make head against you. We ought to remember, that we occupy new ground in the world. We look to the past, but rather as a beacon than a guide.

11. No state before us has ever presented a spectacle so magnificent. Less than forty years ago and the state of Ohio was only in prospect: since that time she has come into being. Behold her now the fourth state in the bright catalogue of all the states; with more than a million of people, intelligent and enterprising; with her four hundred miles of canals—her turnpikes, rail-roads constructing and projected. See her steamboats, her mills, her factories, her fields and her flocks! She sustains at the same time, the highest credit both at home and abroad. Does even ancient fable tell of anything like this! Add to all this that our government is of the most popular kind. Public will gives law, and enforces obedience: public sentiment, then, is the unlimited sovereign of this state. Other nations have hereditary sovereigns; and one of the most important duties of their governments is, to take care of the education of the heir to the throne: these children about your streets, some of whom cannot even speak your language, are to be your future sovereigns. Is it not important then that they should be well educated? Is it not important that they should understand the genius of your constitution and your laws? Should they not be able to read the daily issues from your different presses, civil and religious? Can you calculate highly on their judgment, either in governing themselves or selecting others for posts of honor, if they themselves are not intelligent?

12. All nations are looking on our experiment. Individuals bid us God speed. But every court in Europe would rejoice to see us do as they have long prophesied we must do, dissolve in anarchy. After having been, for a brief space, made the sport of contending factions; and when our houses had been burned, our fields made desolate, and our families destroyed, hail as our deliverer the fortunate tyrant who had the address to seize the reins of government, hold them steadily enough to secure our lives and property, and trample upon our liberties.

13. From such a state all are ready to say, Good Lord deliver us! And many, perhaps, are disposed to say, the speaker dreams. But let me refer you to the history of other nations and other times. Did not France desire to be free? Did not she deserve to be free—if a sacrifice of blood and treasure could merit freedom? Nor was she without learning among the privileged orders. No court was ever so crowded with men of learning as that of the unfortunate Louis. But the great mass of the community were uneducated. Hence they were imposed upon by the few: and the people, after achieving all that patriotism, bravery, wealth, and numbers could do—and breasting the opposition of combined Europe with success—ultimately threw themselves into the arms of a Corsican soldier; yes, passed under the yoke of the most galling tyranny, to save themselves from the ravages of an outraged and ignorant mob!

QUESTIONS.—1. What high panegyric has been pronounced upon the State of Ohio? 2. What was one great cause of the early and rapid settlement of this state? 3. Is it true that the general government has made donations to the western states for educational purposes? 4. What did it do? 5. What has been the progress of this state in respect to education? 6. What obligations rest upon her in consequence of this?

ERRORS.—p'tic-lar for par-tic-u-lar; in-que-ries for in-qu'i-ries.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. government, neighborhood; 2. panegyric; 3. appropriations, dissuading, ambition; 4. realized, endowments, educational, uncultivated, consideration; 5. legislature, unpardonable, overlooked, agriculture, manufactures, enterprise; 7. responsibilities.

LESSON LXXXII.

RULE.—Avoid reading in a monotonous way, as if you were not interested and did not understand what is read.

Midnight Musings.—YOUNG.

1. The bell strikes One. We take no note of time
But from its loss: to give it then a tongue
Is wise in man. As if an angel spoke
I feel the solemn sound. If heard aright,
5. It is the knell of my departed hours.
Where are they? With the years beyond the flood.
It is the signal that demands dispatch:
How much is to be done! My hopes and fears
Start up alarm'd, and o'er life's narrow verge
10. Look down—on what? A fathomless abyss.
A dread eternity! how surely mine!
And can eternity belong to me,
Poor pensioner on the bounties of an hour?

- How poor, how rich, how abject, how august,
 15. How complicate, how wonderful is man !
 How passing wonder He who made him such !
 Who center'd in our make such strange extremes,
 From different natures marvelously mix'd,
 Connexion exquisite of distant worlds !
 20. Distinguish'd link in being's endless chain !
 Midway from nothing to the Deity !
 A beam ethereal, sullied and absorpt !
 Though sullied and dishonor'd, still divine !
 Dim miniature of greatness absolute !
 25. An heir of glory ! a frail child of dust !
 Helpless immortal ! insect infinite !
 A worm ! a god !—I tremble at myself,
 And in myself am lost. At home a stranger,
 Thought wanders up and down, surpris'd, aghast,
 30. And wondering at her own. How reason reels !
 O what a miracle to man is man !
 Triumphantly distress'd ! what joy ! what dread !
 Alternately transported and alarm'd ;
 What can preserve my life ! or what destroy !
 35. An angel's arm can't snatch me from the grave ;
 Legions of angels can't confine me there.

- 'Tis past conjecture ; all things rise in proof.
 While o'er my limbs Sleep's soft dominion spread,
 What though my soul fantastic measures trod
 40. O'er fairy fields, or mourn'd along the gloom
 Of pathless woods, or down the craggy steep
 Hurl'd headlong, swam with pain the mantled pool,
 Or scal'd the cliff, or danc'd on hollow winds
 With antic shapes, wild natives of the brain !
 45. Her ceaseless flight, though devious, speaks her nature
 Of subtler essence than the trodden clod ;
 Active, aerial, towering, unconfin'd,
 Unfetter'd with her gross companion's fall.
 Ev'n silent night proclaims my soul immortal ;
 50. Ev'n silent night proclaims eternal day !
 For human weal Heaven husbands all events :
 Dull sleep instructs, nor sport vain dreams in vain.

QUESTIONS.—1. What leads us to "take note of time?" 2. Repeat some of the epithets applied to man. 3. What conclusion is deduced from the activity of mind during sleep?

ERRORS.—mer-a-cle for mir-a-cle; an-gel (pronounced ain-gel;) con-jec-tur for con-jec-ture; pens-ner for pen-sion-er; wun-ner-ful for won-der-ful; sub-tler, pronounced sut-ler.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—9. verge; 10. fathomless; 14. pensioner; 15. complicate; 19. exquisite; 32. triumphantly; 36. legions; 39. fantastic; 41. craggy; 44. antic; 45. devious.

LESSON LXXXII

RULE.—In reading the various names of the Supreme Being, great care should be taken to pronounce them distinctly, and with reverence.

Omnipresence of God.—BIBLE.

1. O Lord, thou hast searched me, and known me. Thou knowest my down sitting and mine up rising, thou understandest my thoughts afar off.

2. Thou compassest my path, and my lying down, and art acquainted with all my ways. For there is not a word in my tongue, but lo, O Lord thou knowest it altogether. Thou hast beset me behind and before, and laid thine hand upon me.

3. Such knowledge is too wonderful for me : it is high, I cannot attain unto it.

4. Whither shall I go from thy spirit ? or whither shall I flee from thy presence ? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there : if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea : Even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me.

5. If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me : even the night shall be light about me : Yea, the darkness hideth not from thee ; but the night shineth as the day ; the darkness and the light are both alike to thee.

QUESTIONS.—1. Can we do any thing without God's seeing and knowing it ? 2. Does he know what we speak and what we think, as well as what we do ? 3. What is meant by (4) " If I make my bed in Hell, thou art there ? " 4. How should the sentiments of this Psalm influence our conduct ?

ERRORS.—sarch-ed for search-ed ; set-ting for sit-ting ; un-der-stand'est for un-der-stand-est ; com'-sesh for com-pass-est ; thar' for there ; kiv-er for cov-er ; morn-in' for morn-ing.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. searched, understandest ; 2. compassest, acquainted ; 3. attain ; 4. ascend, uttermost.

LESSON LXXXIII.

RULE.—Be careful to give a full sound to the vowels. Regard to this rule will correct the common flat, clipping and uninteresting way in which many read.

EXERCISES in which the vowels italicised are to be prolonged.

Hail! holy light!

We praise thee, O Lord God.

These names of the Deity are seldom pronounced with that full and solemn sound that is proper. Lud and Law-ard and Gud and Gawd are too frequently used instead of the proper sounds. If the pupil can learn to speak the three words, O—Lord—God, properly, it will be worth no little attention. Every pupil ought to be exercised on these words till they pronounce them properly, and in a full and solemn tone.

Henry Martyn and Lord Byron.

MISS BEECHER.

1. By reasoning from the known laws of mind, we gain the position, that obedience to the Divine law, is the surest mode of securing every species of happiness attainable in this state of existence.

2. The recorded experience of mankind does no less prove that obedience to the law of God is the true path to happiness. To exhibit this, some specific cases will be selected, and perhaps a fairer illustration cannot be presented than the contrasted records of two youthful personages who have made the most distinguished figure in the Christian, and the literary world: Henry Martyn, the missionary, and Lord Byron, the poet.

3. Martyn was richly endowed with ardent feelings, keen susceptibilities, and superior intellect. He was the object of many affections, and in the principal University of Great Britain, won the highest honors, both in classic literature and mathematical science. He was flattered, caressed, and admired; the road to fame and honor lay open before him, and the brightest hopes of youth seemed ready to be realized.

4. But the hour came when he looked upon a lost and guilty world, in the light of eternity; when he realized the full meaning of the sacrifice of our incarnate God; when he assumed his obligations to become a fellow-worker in recovering a guilty world from the dominion of sin, and all its future woes.

5. "The love of God constrained him;" and without a murmur, for wretched beings, on a distant shore, whom he never saw, of whom he knew nothing but that they were miserable and guilty, he relinquished the wreath of fame, forsook the path of worldly honor, severed the ties of kindred, and gave up friends, country and home. With every nerve throbbing in anguish at the sacrifice, he went forth alone, to degraded heathen society, to solitude and privation, to weariness and painfulness, and to all the trials of missionary life.

6. He spent his days in teaching the guilty and degraded the way of pardon and peace. He lived to write the law of his God in the wide spread character of the Persian nation, and to place a copy in the hands of its king. He lived to contend with the chief Moullahs of Mahomet in the mosques of Shiras, and to kindle a flame in Persia, more undying than its fabled fires.

7. He lived to endure rebuke and scorn, to toil and suffer in a fervid clime, to drag his weary steps over burning sands, with the daily dying hope, that at last he might be laid to rest among his kindred, and on his native shore. Yet even this last earthly hope was not attained, for after spending all his youth in ceaseless labors for the good of others, at the early age of thirty-two, he was laid in an unknown and foreign grave.

8. He died alone—a stranger in a strange land—with no friendly form around to sympathize and soothe him. Yet this was the last record of his dying hand: "I sat in the orchard, and thought with sweet comfort and peace of my God! in solitude, my company! my friend! my comforter!"

9. And in reviewing the record of his short, yet blessed life, even if we forget the exulting joy with which such a benevolent spirit must welcome to heaven the thousands he toiled to save; if we look only at his years of self-denying trial, where were accumulated all the sufferings he was ever to feel, we can find more evidence of true happiness than is to be found in the records of the youthful poet, who was gifted with every susceptibility of happiness, who spent his days in search of selfish enjoyment, who had every source of earthly bliss laid open, and drank to the very dregs.

10. We shall find that a mind that obeys the law of God, is happier when bereft of the chief joys of this world, than a worldly man can be when possessed of them all. The remains of Lord Byron present one of the most mournful exhibitions of a noble mind in all the wide chaos of ruin and disorder. He, also, was naturally endowed with overflowing affections, keen sensibilities, quick conceptions, and a sense of moral rectitude. He had all the constituents of a mind of first rate order. But he passed through existence amid the wildest disorder of a ruined spirit.

11. His mind seemed utterly unbalanced, teeming with rich thoughts and overbearing impulses, the sport of the strangest fancies, and the strongest passions; bound down by no habit, restrained by no principle; a singular combination of great conceptions and fantastic caprices, of manly dignity and childish folly, of nobler feeling and babyish weakness.

12. The lord of Newstead Abbey—the heir of a boasted line of ancestry—a peer of the realm—the pride of the social circle—the leading star of poesy—the hero of Greece—the wonder of the gaping world, can now be followed to his secret haunts. And there the veriest child of the nursery might be amused at some of his silly weaknesses and ridiculous conceits. Distressed about the cut of a collar, fuming at the color of his dress, intensely anxious about the whiteness of his hands, deeply engrossed with monkeys and dogs, and flying about from one whim to another, with a reckless earnestness as ludicrous as it is disgusting.

13. At times this boasted hero and genius, seemed nought but an overgrown child, that had broken its leading strings and overmastered its nurses. At other times he is beheld in all the rounds of dissipation and the haunts of vice, occasionally filling up his leisure in recording and disseminating the disgusting minutiae of his weakness and shame, and with an effrontery and stupidity equalled only by that of the friend who retails them to the insulted world.

14. Again we behold him philosophizing like a sage, and moralizing like a Christian; while often from his bosom burst forth the repinings of a wounded spirit. He sometimes seemed to gaze upon his own mind with wonder, to watch its disordered powers with curious inquiry, to touch its complaining strings, and start at the response; while often with maddening sweep he shook every chord, and sent forth its deep wailings to entrance a wondering world.

15. Both Henry Martyn and Lord Byron shared the sorrows of life, and their records teach the different workings of the Christian and the worldly mind. Byron lost his mother, and when urged not to give way to sorrow, he burst into an agony of grief, saying, "I had but one friend in the world, and now she is gone!" On the death of some of his early friends, he thus writes: "My friends fall around me, and I shall be left a lonely tree before I am withered. I have no resource but my own reflections, and they present no prospect here or hereafter, except the selfish satisfaction of surviving my betters. I am indeed most wretched!"

16. And thus Henry Martyn mourns the loss of one most dear. "Can it be that she has been lying so many months in the cold grave? Would that I could always remember it, or always forget it; but to think a moment on other things, and then feel the remembrance of it come, as if for the first time, rends my heart asunder. O my gracious God, what should I do without Thee! But now thou art manifesting thyself as 'the God of all consolation.' Never was I so near thee. There is nothing in the world for which I could wish to live, except because it may please God to appoint me some work to do. O thou incomprehensibly glorious Savior, what hast thou done to alleviate the sorrows of life!"

17. It is recorded of Byron, that in society he generally appeared humorous and prankish; yet when rallied on his melancholy turn of writing, his constant answer was, that though thus merry and full of laughter, he was at heart one of the most miserable wretches in existence.

18. And thus he writes: "Why, at the very height of desire and human pleasure, worldly, amorous, ambitious, or even avaricious, does there mingle a certain sense of doubt and sorrow—a fear of what is to come—a doubt of what is? If it were not for hope, what would the future be—a hell! As for the past, what predominates in memory—hopes baffled! From whatever place we commence, we know where it must all end. And yet what good is there in knowing it? It does not make men wiser or better. If I were to live over again, I do not know what I would change in my life, unless it were for—not to have lived at all. All history, and experience, and the rest, teach us, that good and evil are pretty equally balanced in this existence, and that what is most to be desired is an easy passage out of it. What can it give us but years, and these have little of good but their ending."

19. And thus Martyn writes: "I am happier here in this remote land, where I seldom hear what happens in the world, than I was in England, where there are so many calls to look at things that are seen. The precious Word is now my only study, by means of translations. Time flows on with great rapidity. It seems as if life would all be gone before any thing is done. I sometimes rejoice that I am but twenty-seven, and that unless God should ordain it otherwise, I may double this number in constant and successful labor. But I shall not cease from my happiness and scarcely from my labor, by passing into the other world."

20. And thus they make their records at anniversaries, when the mind is called to review life and its labors. Thus Byron writes: "At twelve o'clock I shall have completed thirty-three years! I go to my bed with a heaviness of heart at having lived so long and to so little purpose. It is now three minutes past twelve, and I am thirty-three!"

"Alas, my friend, the years pass swiftly by."

But I do not regret them so much for what I have done, as for what I might have done."

21. And thus Martyn: "I like to find myself employed usefully, in a way I did not expect or foresee. The coming year is to be a perilous one, but my life is of little consequence, whether I finish the Persian New Testament or not. I look back with pity on myself, when I attached so much importance to my life and labors. The more I see of my own works, the more I am ashamed of them, for coarseness and clumsiness mar all the works of man. I am sick when I look at the wisdom of man, but am relieved by reflecting, that we have a city whose builder and maker is God. The least of his works is refreshing. A dried leaf, or a straw, make me feel in good company, and complacency and admiration take the place of disgust. What a momentary duration is the life of man! "It glides along, rolling onward forever," may be affirmed of the river; but men pass away as soon as they begin to exist. Well, let the moments pass!"

"They waft us sooner o'er
This life's tempestuous sea,
Soon we shall reach the blissful shore
Of blest eternity!"

22. Such was the experience of those who in youth completed their course. The poet has well described his own career:

"A wandering mass of shapeless flame,
 A pathless comet and a curse,
 The menace of the universe;
 Still rolling on with innate force,
 Without a sphere, without a course,
 A bright deformity on high,
 The monster of the upper sky!"

23. In holy writ we read of those who are "raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever." The lips of man may not apply these terrific words to any whose doom is yet to be disclosed; but there is a passage which none can fear to apply. "Those that are wise, shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as stars forever and forever!"

QUESTIONS.—1. What truth have we gained by reasoning from the known laws of mind? 2. What else furnishes us with evidence of the same truth, and what two characters are given as examples? 3. What is said of Henry Martyn? 4. Why did he give up home, country, and the honors and pleasures of life? 5. Do you suppose he was happier in this world than he would have been if he had lived simply to seek pleasure for himself? 6. Will he be happier in heaven for the sacrifices he made on earth? 7. Who had the most of this world to enjoy—Martyn or Byron? 8. What is said of Byron? 9. Which had the most comfort in seasons of affliction? 10. How did Byron feel when he was enjoying himself the most? 11. How did Martyn feel when he was cut off from most of the pleasures that Byron was seeking? 12. What was the difference in their feelings at their birth-days? 13. What two passages of Scripture indicate the future prospects of two such minds as Byron and Martyn?

ERRORS.—haunts should be pronounced hants; lei-sure should be pronounced le-zhur; sor-rers for sor-rows; ag-ur-ny for ag-o-ny; in-com-pra-hen-si-bly for in-com-pre-hen-si-bly; an-ner-ver-sa-ries for an-ni-ver-sa-ries.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—13. overmastered, disseminating; 14. entrance; 15. resource; 16. gracious; 17. melancholy; 18. predominates; 20. anniversaries; 21. perilous.

Byron.—POLLOK.

1. He touched his harp, and nations heard, entranced.
 As some vast river of unfailling source,
 Rapid, exhaustless, deep, his numbers flowed,
 And oped new fountains in the human heart.
5. Where fancy halted, weary in her flight,
 In other men, his, fresh as morning rose,
 And soared untrodden heights, and seemed at home,
 Where angels bashful looked. Others, though great,
 Beneath their argument seemed struggling whales;
10. He from above descending, stooped to touch
 The loftiest thought; and proudly stooped, as though
 It scarce deserved his verse. With nature's self
 He seemed an old acquaintance, free to jest
 At will with all her glorious majesty.
15. He laid his hand upon "the ocean's mane,"
 And played familiar with his hoary locks.
 Stood on the Alps, stood on the Apennines;
 And with the thunder talked, as friend to friend;
 And wove his garland of the lightning's wing,
20. In sportive twist—the lightning's fiery wing,
 Which, as the footsteps of the dreadful God,
 Marching upon the storm in vengeance seemed—
 Then turned, and with the grasshopper, who sung
 His evening song beneath his feet, conversed.
25. Suns, moons, and stars, and clouds his sisters were;
 Rocks, mountains, meteors, seas, and winds, and storms
 His brothers—younger brothers, whom he scarce
 As equals deemed.
 As some fierce comet of tremendous size,
30. To which the stars did reverence as it passed;
 So he through learning and through fancy took
 His flight sublime; and on the loftiest top
 Of fame's dread mountain sat; not soiled, and worn,
 As if he from the earth had labored up;

35. But as some bird of heavenly plumage fair,
He looked, which down from higher regions came,
And perched it there, to see what lay beneath.
Great man! the nations gazed and wondered much,
And praised: and many called his evil good.
40. Wits wrote in favor of his wickedness:
And kings to do him honor took delight.
Thus full of titles, flattery, honor, fame;
Beyond desire, beyond ambition full,—
He died—he died of what? Of wretchedness.
45. Drank every cup of joy, heard every trump
Of fame; drank early, deeply drank; drank draughts
That common millions might have quenched—then die
Of thirst, because there was no more to drink.
His goddess, nature, wooed, embraced, enjoyed,
50. Fell from his arms abhorred; his passions died;
Died, all but dreary, solitary pride;
And all his sympathies in being died.
As some ill-guided bark, well built and tall,
Which angry tides cast on our desert shore,
55. And then retiring, leave it there to rot
And moulder in the winds and rains of heaven;
So he, cut from the sympathies of life,
And cast ashore from pleasure's boisterous surge,
A wandering, weary, worn and wretched thing,
60. Scorched, and desolate, and blasted soul,
A gloomy wilderness of dying thought,—
Repined and groaned, and withered from the earth.

QUESTIONS.—1. Who was Byron? 2. Where did he die? 3. Why is he compared to a comet? 4. What was his character? 5. Are talents a blessing or curse to such a man as Byron?

ERRORS.—drort for draught (pronounced draft); mor-nin' for morning; fur-mil-i-ar for fa-mil-i-ar; wretch-id-ness for wretch-ed-ness; tre-men-jis for tre-men-dous (pronounced tre-men-dus); me-tors for me-te-ors.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. entranced; 2. exhaustless; 7. Apennines; 9. struggling; 11. nature; 14. familiar; 19. garland; 26. meteors; 29. tremendous; 31. fancy; 32. sublime; 33. soiled; 40. wits; 42. flattery; 49. goddess; 52. sympathies; 54. tides; 58. boisterous; 61. wilderness.

LESSON LXXXVI.

RULE.—Speak every syllable distinctly, and do not slip over the little words, nor pronounce them wrong.

Chesterfield and Paul.—MISS BEECHER.

1. To these youthful witnesses* whose remains show the difference between the happiness of those who obey or disobey the law of God, may be added the testimony of two who had fulfilled their years. The first was the polished, the witty, the elegant and admired Earl of Chesterfield, who tried every source of earthly enjoyment, and at the end makes this acknowledgment.

2. "I have seen," says he, "the silly rounds of business and of pleasure, and have done with them all. I have enjoyed all the pleasures of the world, and consequently know their futility, and do not regret their loss. I appraise them at their real value, which is, in truth, very low. Whereas those that have not experienced, always overrate them. They only see their gay outside, and are dazzled at the glare.

3. But I have been behind the scenes. I have seen all the coarse pulleys and dirty ropes which exhibit and move the gaudy machines; and I have seen and smelt the tallow candles which illuminate the whole decoration, to the astonishment and admiration of the ignorant audience.

4. When I reflect on what I have seen, what I have heard, and what I have done, I can hardly persuade myself that all that frivolous hurry of bustle and pleasure of the world, had any reality; but I look upon all that is passing as one of those romantic dreams, which opium commonly occasions; and I do by no means desire to repeat the nauseous dose, for the sake of the fugitive dream.

5. Shall I tell you that I bear this melancholy situation with that meritorious constancy and resignation, which most people boast of? No, for I really cannot help it. I bear it, because I must bear it, whether I will or no! I think of nothing but killing time the best way I can, now that he is become my enemy. It is my resolution to sleep in the carriage during the remainder of the journey of life."

6. The other personage was Paul, the Aged. For Christ and the salvation of those for whom Christ died, Paul "suffered the loss of all things;" and this is the record of his course; "in labors abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths, oft; in journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the wilderness, in perils among false brethren. In weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness,—and that which cometh daily upon me, the care of all the churches.

7. We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, yet not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed. For though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day. For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

8. And as the time drew near when he was to be "offered up," and he looked back on the past course of his life, these are his words of triumphant exultation: "I have fought a good fight! I have finished my course! I have kept the faith! henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which Christ, the righteous judge shall give!"

9. To this testimony of the experience of mankind, may be added that of Scripture. "Whoso trusteth in the Lord, happy is he! The fear of the Lord, that is wisdom, and to depart from evil is understanding. Wisdom is better than rubies, and all the things that may be desired are not to be compared to her. Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace. Keep sound wisdom, so shall it be life to thy soul. Then shalt thou walk in thy way safely, and when thou liest down thou shalt not be afraid, yea, thou shalt lie down, and thy sleep shall be sweet."

10. And thus the Redeemer invites to his service: "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls!"

QUESTIONS.—1. What two persons who lived to be old, have left their testimony in regard to the way to be happy? 2. What is said of Lord Chesterfield? 3. How did he look on past life? 4. What did he resolve to do? 5. What is said of Paul? 6. Which was the happier man of the two? 7. What does the Bible say respecting the way of happiness?

ERRORS.—el-e-gunt for el-e-gant; con-ser-quent-ly for con-se-quent-ly; 'cause for be-cause; per-son-ige for per-son-age.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. acknowledgment; 2. consequently; 3. illuminate; 4. nauseous; 5. resignation; 6. redemption; 7. persecuted; 8. triumphant; 9. compared; 10. Redeemer.

LESSON LXXXVII.

RULE.—Let each pupil in the class observe and mention every syllable that is not sounded as each one reads.

Henry First after the Death of his Son.

HEMANS.

1. The bark that held the prince went down,
The sweeping waves rolled on ;—
And what was England's glorious crown
To him that wept a son ?
He lived—for life may long be borne,
Ere sorrow breaks its chain ;
Still comes not death to those who mourn ;
He never smiled again !

2. There stood proud forms before his throne,
The stately and the brave ;
But which could fill the place of one,
That one beneath the wave ?
Before him passed the young and fair,
In pleasure's reckless train ?
But seas dashed o'er his son's bright hair—
He never smiled again !

He sat where festal bowls went round ;
He heard the minstrel sing ;
He saw the tourney's victor crowned
Amid the mighty ring ;—
A murmur of the restless deep
Mingled with every strain,
A voice of winds that would not sleep :—
He never smiled again !

4. Hearts in that time, closed o'er the trace
Of vows once fondly poured ;
And strangers took the kinsman's place
At many a joyous board ;
Graves, which true love had bathed with tears,
Were left to heaven's bright rain ;
Fresh hopes were born for other years :—
He never smiled again !

QUESTIONS.—1. Relate the historical event upon which this poem is founded. 2. Is there any thing in earthly splendor that can soothe the suffering heart ? 3. What is the allusion in the third verse ?

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. Bark ; 2. reckless ; 3. festal, tourney ; 4. vows, kinsman, joyous.

LESSON LXXXVIII.

RULE.—Be careful to give a full sound to the vowels. Regard to this rule will correct the common flat, clipping and uninteresting way in which many read.

Effects of Gambling.—TIMOTHY FLINT.

1. I am a father. I live in a region where gambling is the common and crying sin. I witness its demoralizing and ruinous consequences on every side. The village in which I write, could furnish from its annals a hundred warning examples of hopeless misery and ruin—consequences of the indulgence of this sin. My heart as a parent, my feelings as a man, my conscience as professing to be a Christian, have prompted me to address a word of warning to the community, of which I am a member, against this sin. There is not another, against which I have more earnestly prayed God to guard my children. In attempting to warn them, and my young readers, and the community in general, against it, so many images of desolation and ruin crowd upon my mind, that I find it difficult to select those most calculated to breathe abhorrence.

2. In many parts of our country, this vice is little practised and less tolerated. In other and very extensive regions of our country, it is a sweeping epidemic. It pollutes the city, and, associated with drunkenness, blasphemy and murder, stalks abroad in the community, shameless and triumphant. High and low, rich and poor, suspend their money on the turn of the cards. Even females, who lead the fashions and give tone to public sentiment, are seen alternately blenching with terror and flashing with rage, around the gambling table.

3. The serious, and even professors of religion, see it so universally practised, or tolerated, that they lose something of just abhorrence, and catch something of the contagious indifference. The savages on our borders gamble, like the whites; and when they have lost all, commit suicide. The free negroes gamble; and go on wallowing down the descending slough of debauchery and crime. The poor slaves, when they have accumulated a little by the labors of one holiday, when the next returns, sit down to imitate the pernicious example of their superiors.

4. In short, in these regions, the mania of gambling is a sweeping pestilence, infecting, in its course, the magistrate, the planter, the professional man, and the young aspirant for fame and honor, just commencing life ; spreading its contagion around the fashionable card-table, making its way into the dark cells of groceries and taverns, carrying misery and ruin in its course, and adding to the sins of blasphemy, drunkenness, and cheating, the last sickly finish of despair.

5. No eloquence can reach, no pen adequately describe its withering influence, in unnerving all honest exertion, in searing all moral feeling ; and in adding to the squalidness of poverty the recklessness of guilt, and the ultimate prospect of temporal and eternal ruin. Ye, who are yet free from the contagion, if ye have not made an immutable covenant with death and with hell, " watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation."

6. In tracing the enormity of this sin, compared with others, there is little danger of assigning it too forward a place in the black catalogue. The avaricious "love of money," when operating even upon honest pursuits, "is the root of all evil." But when the unbridled appetite for accumulation gets scope in the direction of gambling, sharpening it, as the gambling table ordinarily does, by all that can tempt the eye or inflame the blood ; then it is that we see avarice becoming the most seducing and ruinous passion of human nature.

7. Then it is that we sometimes see men and women, sustaining the highest rank in society, struggling to suppress the visible manifestations on their countenance of what is passing within ; and laboring to seem calm when a vulture is preying upon their bosoms. Then it is that we sometimes hear the impious ejaculation, the loathsome curse, proceeding even from the lips of beauty. Who could have witnessed such scenes, and not have felt, as we have felt, for the degradation of our race ?

8. It steals, perhaps more often than any other sin, with an imperceptible influence on its victim. Its first pretext is inconsiderable, and falsely termed innocent play, with no more than the gentle excitement necessary to amusement. This plea, once indulged, is but too often "as the letting out of water." The interest imperceptibly grows. Pride of superior skill, opportunity, avarice, and all the overwhelming passions of depraved nature, ally themselves with the incipient and growing fondness. Dam and dyke are swept away. The victim struggles in vain, and is borne down by the uncontrolled current.

9. Thousands have given scope to the latent guilty avarice, unconscious of the guest they harbored in their bosoms.

Thousands have exulted over the avails of gambling, without comprehending the baseness of using the money of another, won without honest industry, obtained without an equivalent: and perhaps from the simplicity, rashness, and inexperience of youth. Multitudes have commenced gambling, thinking only to win a small sum, and prove their superior skill and dexterity, and there pause.

10. But it is the teaching of all time, it is the experience of human nature, that effectual resistance to powerful propensities, if made at all, is usually made before the commission of the first sin. My dear reader! let me implore you, by the mercies of God and the worth of your soul, to contemplate this enormous evil only from a distance. Stand firmly against the first temptation, under whatsoever specious forms it may assail you. "Touch not." "Handle not." "Enter not into temptation."

11. It is the melancholy and well known character of this sin, that, where once an appetite for it has gained possession of the breast, the common motives, the gentle excitements, and the ordinary inducements to business or amusement, are no longer felt. It incorporates itself with the whole body of thought, and fills with its fascination all the desires of the heart. Nothing can henceforward arouse the spell-bound victim to a pleasurable consciousness of existence, but the destructive stimulus of gambling.

QUESTIONS.—What does the writer say of himself by way of introduction to the subject? 2. How is it in different portions of our country in respect to the prevalence of the vice of gambling? 3. What rank does this vice hold in comparison with others? 4. How does it usually acquire power over an individual? 5. What is the only safe course to pursue in respect to this vice?

ERRORS.—gamb-lin' for gamb-ling; de-mor-ul-i-zin' for de-mor-al-izing; cal-c'la-ted for cal-cu-la-ted; ab-hor-runce for ab-hor-rence.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. demoralizing, consequences, community; 2. extensive, epidemic, drunkenness, blasphemy, triumphant; 3. contagious, indifference; 4. mania, pestilence, magistrate, professional, commencing; 5. eloquence, adequately, squalidness, immutable; 6. enormity, catalogue, accumulation, ordinarily; 7. manifestations, ejaculation, loathsome; 8. inconsiderable, imperceptible; 9. unconscious, equivalent, inexperience; 10. propensities, contemplate; 11. melancholy, fascination.

LESSON LXXXIX.

RULE.—Be careful to give a full sound to the vowels. Regard to this rule will correct the common flat, clipping and uninteresting way in which many read.

1. Another appalling view of gambling is, that it is the prolific stem, the fruitful parent, of all other vices. Blasphemy, falsehood, cheating, drunkenness, quarrel and murder, are all naturally connected with gambling; and what has been said, with so much power and truth, of another sin, may, with equal emphasis and truth, be asserted of this: "Allow yourself to become a confirmed gambler; and detestable as this practice is, it will soon be only one among many gross sins of which you will be guilty." Giving yourself up to the indulgence of another sinful course, might prove your ruin; but then you might perish only under the guilt of the indulgence of a single gross sin.

2. But, should you become a gambler, you will in all probability, descend to destruction with the added infamy of having been the slave of all kinds of iniquity, and "led captive by Satan at his will." Gambling seizes hold of all the passions, allies itself with all the appetites, and compels every propensity to pay tribute. The subject, however plausible in his external deportment, becomes avaricious, greedy, insatiable. Meditations upon the card table occupy all the day and night dreams. Had he the power, he would annihilate all the hours of this our short life, that necessarily intervene between the periods of his favorite pursuit.

3. Cheating is a sure and inseparable attendant upon a continued course of gambling. We well know with what horror the canons of the card table repel this charge. It pains us to assert our deep and deliberate conviction of its truth. There must be prostration of moral principle, and silence of conscience, even to begin with it. Surely a man who regards the natural sense of right, laying the obligations of Christianity out of the question, cannot sit down with the purpose to win the money of another in this way.

4. He must be aware, in doing it, that avarice and dishonest thoughts, it may be almost unconsciously to himself, minge with his motives. Having once closed his eyes upon the unworthiness of his motives, and deceived himself, he begins to study how he may deceive others. Every moralist has remarked upon the delicacy of conscience ; and that, from the first violation, it becomes more and more callous, until finally it sleeps a sleep as of death, and ceases to remonstrate. The gambler is less and less scrupulous about the modes of winning, so that he can win. No person will be long near the gambling table of high stakes, be the standing of the players what it may, without hearing the charge of CHEATING bandied back and forwards ; or reading the indignant expression of it in their countenances. One half of our fatal duels have their immediate or remote origin in insinuations of this sort.

5. The altercations of loss and gain ; the preternatural excitement of the mind, and consequent depression when that excitement has passed away ; the bacchanalian merriment of guilty associates ; the loss of natural rest ; in short, the very atmosphere of the gambling table, foster the temperament of hard drinking. A keen sense of interest may, indeed, and often does restrain the gambler, while actually engaged in his employment, that he may possess the requisite coolness to watch his antagonist, and avail himself of every passing advantage.

6. But the moment the high excitement of play is intermitted—the moment the passions vibrate back to the state of repose, what shall sustain the sinking spirits ; what shall renerve the relaxed physical nature ; what shall fortify the mind against the tortures of conscience, and the thoughts of “a judgment to come,” but intoxication ? It is the experience of all time, that a person is seldom a gambler for any considerable period, without being also a drunkard.

7. Blasphemy follows, as a thing of course ; and is, indeed, the well known and universal dialect of the gambler. How often has my heart sunk within me, as I have passed the dark and dire receptacles of the gambler, and seen the red and bloated faces, and inhaled the mingled smells of tobacco and potent drink ; and heard the loud, strange, and horrid curses of the players ; realizing the while, that these beings so occupied were candidates for eternity, and now on the course which, if not speedily forsaken, would fix them for ever in hell.

8. We have already said, that gambling naturally leads to quarrelling and murder. How often have we retired to our berth in the steam-boat, and heard charges of dishonesty, accents of reviling and recrimination, and hints that these charges must be met and settled at another time and place, ring in our ears, as we have been attempting to commune with God and settle in a right frame to repose! Many corpses of young men, who met a violent death from this cause, have we seen carried to their long home! Every gambler, in the region where we write, is always armed to the teeth, and goes to his horrid pursuit, as the gladiator formerly presented himself on the arena of combat.

9. The picture receives deeper shades, if we take into the grouping the wife, or the daughter, or the mother, who lies sleepless, and ruminating through the long night, trembling lest her midnight retirement shall be invaded by those who bring back the husband and the father wounded, or slain, in one of those sudden frays which the card table, its accompaniments, and the passions it excites, so frequently generate. Suppose these forebodings should not be realized, and that he should steal home alive in the morning, with beggary and drunkenness, guilt and despair, written on his haggard countenance, and accents of sullenness and ill-temper falling from his tongue, how insupportably gloomy must be the prospects of the future to that family!

10. These are but feeble and general sketches of the misery and ruin to individuals and to society from the indulgence of this vice, during the present life. If the wishes of unbelief were true, and there were no life after this, what perverse and miserable calculations would be those of the gambler, taking into view only the present world! But, in any view of the character and consequences of gambling, who shall dare close his eyes upon its future bearing on the interest and the eternal welfare of his soul? Who shall dare lay out of the calculation the retributions of eternity?

11. Each of the sins that enters into this deadly compound of them all, must incur the threatened displeasure and punishment of the Almighty. If there be degrees in the misery and despair of the tenants of that region, "where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched," how must the persevering and impenitent gambler sink, as if "a millstone were hung about his neck, and he cast into the sea!" Say thou, my youthful reader, I implore thee, looking up to the Lord for firm and unalterable purpose, "I will hold fast my integrity and not let it go!"

12. We scarcely remember an instance, in which a confirmed and persevering gambler did not end his career in poverty. But even, if cases could be cited, as no doubt there might be, in which gamblers were ultimately successful, and transmitted their ill-gotten gains to posterity, vitiated as moral feeling is in the regions where gambling prevails, there is no region so depraved, as that the inhabitants would not indignantly point out these men, as they passed, and say, "There is the man who won his money by gambling!"

13. There is another punishment inflicted by public feeling, which, to a man who has a heart, is more terrible still. Though we have no coat of arms for descent of honorable deeds, there is one for those of infamy. The third and fourth generation will remember how you acquired your wealth, and will bring it up in derision and scorn to your posterity.

14. Even as respects fashionable gambling, it has too often been our lot to be required, by circumstances, to be present where fashionable gambling was practised. We have seen it poorly and thinly veiled under the forms of politeness. We have seen it steadily advance from the small stake, put down as a counter, to deep play. We have seen the suppressed emotion, the bitter smile, and have heard the half uttered curse, and the indirect and implied charge of dishonesty. We have seen the thing, in short, commence in the spirit of apparent kindness and good will, and for mere amusement, and soon end in its own unveiled and undisguised deformity. Show me those who now play fashionably and for amusement; and, in a short time, I will show you the same persons transformed into confirmed gamblers.

15. We cannot persuade ourselves to dismiss a subject which lies so deeply on our heart, without citing a recent case of the results of gambling. We would be glad, if our limits allowed us, to hang up a thousand beacons of this sort in the dark and dreary history of gamblers, that they might stand recorded as solemn warnings to deter others.

16. It is given me by a friend, as having occurred in this vicinity. A young man immigrated here from the north, and was engaged as an overseer. His cheek was fresh with the healthy blood which had been fanned by the northern breeze. He had a fine person, was well educated, and what was better than all, he sustained an unblemished moral character. He had been reared in a virtuous family, under that religious discipline which was formerly the glory of that portion of the country.

17. But he wanted, as too many interesting young men, who come among us from that region, want, that deep and settled principle, that unyielding purpose, which will make no compromise with what is wrong. He married an amiable and distinguished young lady, who brought him an ample fortune. For a couple of years nothing seemed wanting to his prosperity and enjoyment. He had the entire affection of his wife and friends, and was growing in the esteem of the country. As is too often the case, he gradually imbibed the infection of the general example.

18. Every body about him gambled; and he of course had his daily temptations. He at first regarded cards with abhorrence. Some kind of thorn rankles in almost every bosom; and, amidst all his seeming prosperity, he had his. He was stung with the charge of an enemy, that he was a needy adventurer, a fortune-hunter, who brought his wife nothing. He sometimes played cards, merely as a trial of skill, and was generally triumphant.

19. It occurred to him, that success at cards, which seemed so much at his command, might redeem him from the reproach of having been a needy fortune-hunter. He was gradually seduced to the gambling table; often, however, stating to the narrator his mental upbraidings, and the compunctious visitings of his conscience. As is an unvarying circumstance in the annals of a gambler, he went deeper and deeper, and was for a long time successful. He had bargained for a plantation, which he intended as an affectionate present of surprise to his wife; and, in the view of others, to redeem him from the stigma of having brought her nothing. I need not follow him in his downward course. He had nearly realized what would enable him to complete his purchase.

20. The fiend that had tempted him thus far, at length deserted him. He doubled stake upon stake, until he had lost all his winnings, and all that the affection of his wife had enabled him to lose. Her own fortune, much as he professed to love her, would have been equally sacrificed, but for the stern and yet just and benevolent providence of the laws among us. He even put up, at a certain value, the ultimate chance of reversion, in case of her decease before him; and lost it. His eyes opened at last; but he had not the courage to return to her to whom report would soon carry the whole transaction. He fled.

21. He was traced on ship board, a self-despising outcast from a happy and peaceful home, an affectionate wife, and an infant babe. The community which cherished him, in despising him, cruelly threw the stigma on the country of his birth. She pines still for his return and fondly thinks that the next steam-boat will bring him back. He probably wanders, if he lives, a vagabond on the sea. May we not hope, that the influence of an early, pious education will be, as an invisible tie about his neck, to bring him, a prodigal, penitent and reformed, to his wife, his babe, his country, and his God?

QUESTIONS.—1. What appalling view of gambling is presented in this chapter? 2. What vice is the first sure attendant upon gambling? 3. What is the evidence supporting this assertion? 4. What vice next follows? 5. How is it brought on? 6. What follows next to hard drinking? 7. What is the ultimate result? 8. What effect is produced by considering the wife, mother, etc.? 9. What is the future bearing of this vice? 10. What punishment is inflicted by public sentiment on this vice? 11. Narrate the case of the young man here mentioned.

ERRORS.—quar-rul for quar-rel; pur-ish for per-ish; med'-ta-tions for med-i-ta-tions.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. prolific; 3. card-table; 7. candidates; 8. recrimination; 9. haggard, insupportably; 11. compound; 12. confirmed, vitiated; 14. practised; 16. immigrated; 17. compromised, infection; 18. temptations, adventurer, rankles; 19. command, plantation, compunctions, unvarying; 20. fiend; 21. community, penitent, reformed, prodigal.

LESSON XC.

RULE.—Observe the commas, and stop at each long enough to take breath.

The Miser.—POLLOK.

1. Gold many hunted, sweat and bled for gold;
Waked all the night, and labored all the day;
And what was this allurement, dost thou ask?
A dust dug from the bowels of the earth,
5. Which, being cast into the fire, came out
A shining thing that fools admired, and called
A god: and in devout and humble plight
Before it kneeled, the greater to the less.
And on its altar, sacrificed ease, peace,
10. Truth, faith, integrity; good conscience, friends,
Love, charity, benevolence, and all
The sweet and tender sympathies of life;
And to complete the horrid murderous rite,
And signalize their folly, offered up

15. Their souls, and an eternity of bliss,
To gain them ; what ? an hour of dreaming joy,
A feverish hour that hastened to be done,
And ended in the bitterness of woe.
Most, for the luxuries it bought, the pomp,
20. The praise, the glitter, fashion, and renown,
This yellow phantom followed and adored.
But there was one in folly, farther gone,
With eye awry, incurable, and wild,
The laughing-stock of devils and of men,
25. And by his guardian angel quite given up,
The miser, who with dust inanimate
Held wedded intercourse.

Ill-guided wretch !

- Thou mightst have seen him at the midnight hour,
30. When good men slept, and in light-winged dreams
Ascended up to God, in wasteful hall,
With vigilance and fasting worn to skin
And bone, and wrapped in most debasing rags,
Thou mightst have seen him bending o'er his heaps,
35. And holding strange communion with his gold ;
And as his thievish fancy seemed to hear
The night-man's foot approach, starting alarmed,
And in his old, decrepit, withered hand,
That palsy shook, grasping the yellow earth
40. To make it sure.

Of all God made upright,

- And in their nostrils breathed a living soul,
Most fallen, most prone, most earthy, most debased ;
Of all that sold Eternity for Time,
45. None bargained on so easy terms with death.
Illustrious fool ! Nay, most inhuman wretch !
He sat among his bags, and, with a look
Which hell might be ashamed of, drove the poor
Away unalmsed, and midst abundance died,
Sorest of evils ! died of utter want.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is the subject of this extract ? 2. What are some of the evil consequences of the love of money ? 3. What good can wealth bestow on its votaries ? 4. What are some of the marks of a miserly character ? 5. What are the effects of avarice upon body and mind ? 6. What is the miser's fate ?

ERRORS.—bowles for bow-els ; 'arth for earth ; in-teg-er-ty for integ-ri-ty ; fol-ter-ed for fol-low-ed.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—3. allurements ; 4. bowels ; 6. admired ; 10. integrity, conscience ; 11. benevolence ; 12. sympathies ; 13. murderous ; 14. signalize ; 21. phantom ; 23. awry, incurable ; 24. laughing-stock ; 26. inanimate ; 32. vigilance ; 38. decrepit ; 46. illustrious ; 49. unalmsed.

LESSON XCI.

RULE.—Read slowly and distinctly, and pronounce every syllable.

True Wisdom.—BIBLE.

1. But where shall wisdom be found ?
And where is the place of understanding ?
Man knoweth not the price thereof ;
Nor can it be found in the land of the living.
5. The deep saith, It is not with me ;
And the sea saith, It is not with me.
It cannot be gotten for gold,
For shall silver be weighed out as the price thereof.
It cannot be purchased with the gold of Ophir,
10. With the precious onyx, or the sapphire.
Gold and crystal are not to be compared with it ;
Nor can it be purchased with jewels of fine gold.
No mention shall be made of coral, or of crystal,
For wisdom is more precious than pearls.
15. The topaz of Ethiopia cannot equal it,
Nor can it be purchased with the purest gold.

- Whence then cometh wisdom ?
And where is the place of understanding ?
Since it is hidden from the eyes of all the living,
20. And kept close from the fowls of the air.
Destruction and Death say,
We have heard of its fame with our ears.
God only knoweth the way to it ;
He only knoweth its dwelling-place.
 25. For he seeth to the ends of the earth,
And surveyeth all things under the whole heaven.
When he gave the winds their weight,
And adjusted the waters by measure ;
When he prescribed laws to the rain,
 30. And a path to the glittering thunderbolt ;
Then did he see it, and make it known ;
He established it, and searched it out ;
But he said unto man,
Behold ! the fear of the Lord, that is thy wisdom,
 35. And to depart from evil, thy understanding.

QUESTIONS.—1. What are onyx and sapphire ? 2. What is true wisdom ?

ERRORS.—pre-cious for pre-cious ; arth for earth , per-scri-bed for pre-scri-bed.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. wisdom ; 2. understanding ; 10. onyx, sapphire ; 11. crystal ; 15. topaz ; 21. destruction ; 28. adjusted ; 29. pre-scribed ; 30. glittering ; 32. established.

LESSON XCII.

RULE.—Be careful to speak such little words as the, of, a, in, from, at, by, etc., very distinctly, and yet not to dwell on them so long as on the other more important words.

The Wife.—W. IRVING.

1. I have often had occasion to remark the fortitude with which women sustain the most overwhelming reverses of fortune. Those disasters which break down the spirit of a man, and prostrate him in the dust, seem to call forth all the energies of the softer sex, and give such intrepidity and elevation to their character, that at times it approaches to sublimity.

2. Nothing can be more touching, than to behold a soft and tender female, who had been all weakness and dependence, and alive to every trivial roughness, while treading the prosperous paths of life, suddenly rising in mental force to be the comforter and supporter of her husband under misfortune, and abiding, with unshrinking firmness, the most bitter blasts of adversity.

3. As the vine, which has long twined its graceful foliage about the oak, and been lifted by it into sunshine, will, when the hardy plant is rifted by the thunderbolt, cling around it with its caressing tendrils, and bind up its shattered boughs; so is it beautifully ordered by Providence, that woman, who is the mere dependent and ornament of man in his happier hours, should be his stay and solace when smitten with sudden calamity; winding herself into the rugged recesses of his nature, tenderly supporting the drooping head, and binding up the broken heart.

4. I was once congratulating a friend, who had around him a blooming family, knit together in the strongest affection. "I can wish you no better lot," said he, with enthusiasm, "than to have a wife and children. If you are prosperous, there they are to share your prosperity; if otherwise, there they are to comfort you."

5. And, indeed, I have observed, that a married man, falling into misfortune, is more apt to retrieve his situation in the world than a single one; partly, because he is more stimulated to exertion by the necessities of the helpless and beloved beings who depend upon him for subsistence; but chiefly, because his spirits are soothed and relieved by domestic endearments, and his self-respect kept alive by finding, that though all abroad is darkness and humiliation, yet there is still a little world of love at home, of which he is the monarch.

6. Whereas, a single man is apt to run to waste and self-neglect; to fancy himself lonely and abandoned, and his heart to fall to ruin, like some deserted mansion, for want of an inhabitant.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is said of the fortitude of the female sex? 2. What effect is produced on the mind by the view of this trait? 3. To what natural object is it beautifully compared? 4. Why should man have a family? 5. What is apt to be the case with the single man, as to character and comfort? 6. Do married persons generally live longer than unmarried?

ERRORS.—of'n for of-ten; o-ver-wel-min' for o-ver-whelm-ing; for-tin and for-chune for fort-une.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. fortitude, overwhelming, disasters, intrepidity, sublimity; 2. dependence, roughness, unshrinking, adversity; 3. foliage, thunderbolt, rifted, shattered, beautifully, solace, recesses, rugged, tendrils; 4. congratulating, enthusiasm, prosperous; 5. ~~ming~~ulated, retrieve, necessities, subsistence, domestic; 6. abandoned.

LESSON XCIII.

RULE.—Be careful to give all the consonants their full sound in each word.

Duty of the American Orator.—GRIMKE.

1. One theme of duty still remains, and I have placed it alone: because of its peculiar dignity, sacredness and importance. Need I tell you that I speak of the union of the states? Let the American orator discharge all other duties but this, if indeed it be not impossible, with the energy and eloquence of John Rutledge, and the disinterested fidelity of Robert Morris, yet shall he be counted a traitor, if he attempt to dissolve the union.

2. His name, illustrious as it may have been, shall then be gibbeted on every hill-top throughout the land, a monument of his crime and punishment, and of the shame and grief of his country. If indeed he believe, and doubtless there may be such, that wisdom demands the dissolution of the union, that the south should be severed from the north, the west be independent of the east, let him cherish the sentiment, for his own sake, in the solitude of his breast, or breathe it only in the confidence of friendship.

3. Let him rest assured, that as his country tolerates the monarchist and the aristocrat of the old world she tolerates him ; but should he plot the dismemberment of the union, the same trial, judgment, and execution await him as would await them, should they attempt to establish the aristocracy of Venice, or the monarchy of Austria on the ruins of our confederacy. To him as to them she leaves freedom of speech ; and the very licentiousness of the press : and permits them to write, even in the spirit of scorn, and hatred, and unfairness.

4. She trembles not at such effort, reckless and hostile as they may be. She smiles at their impotence ; while she mourns over their infatuation. But let them lift the hand of parricide, in the insolence of pride, or the madness of power, to strike their country, and her countenance, in all the severity and terrors of a parent's wrath shall smite them with amazement and horror. Let them strike, and the voices of millions of freemen from the city and hamlet, from the college and the farm-house, from the cabins amid the western wilds, and our ships scattered around the world, shall utter the stern irrevocable judgment, self banishment for life, or ignominious death.

5. Be it then among the noblest offices of American Eloquence to cultivate, in the people of every state, a deep and fervent attachment to the union. The union is to us the marriage-bond of states ; indissoluble in life, to be dissolved, we trust, only on that day when nations shall die in a moment, never to rise again. Let the American orator discountenance, then, all the arts of intrigue and corruption, which not only pollute the people and dishonor republican institutions, but prepare the way for the ruin of both—how secretly, how surely, let history declare. Let him banish from his thoughts, and his lips, the hypocrisy of the demagogue, equally deceitful and degraded,

“ With smooth dissimulation, skill'd to grace
A devil's purpose, with an angel's face.”

6. Let that demagogue and those arts, his instruments of power, be regarded as pretended friends, but secret and dangerous enemies of the people. Let it never be forgotten that to him and to them we owe all the licentiousness and violence, all the unprincipled and unfeeling persecution of party spirit. Let the American orator labor then, with all the solemnity of a religious duty, with all the intensity of filial love, to convince his countrymen that the danger to liberty in this country is to be traced to those sources. Let the European tremble for his institutions, in the presence of military power and for the warrior's ambition.

7. Let the American dread, as the arch-enemy of republican institutions, the shock of exasperated parties, and the implacable revenge of demagogues. The discipline of standing armies, is the terror of freedom in Europe; but the tactics of parties, the standing armies of America, are still more formidable to liberty with us.

8. Let the American orator frown, then, on that ambition, which, pursuing its own aggrandizement and gratification, perils the harmony and integrity of the union, and counts the grief, anxiety, and expostulations of millions, as the small dust of the balance. Let him remember that ambition, like the Amruta cup of Indian fable, gives to the virtuous an immortality of glory and happiness, but to the corrupt an immortality of ruin, shame and misery.

9. Let not the American orator, in the great questions on which he is to speak or write, appeal to the mean and groveling qualities of human nature. Let him love the people, and respect himself too much to dishonor them, and degrade himself by an appeal to selfishness and prejudice, to jealousy, fear, and contempt. The greater the interests, and the more sacred the rights which may be at stake, the more resolutely should he appeal to the generous feelings, the noble sentiments, the calm considerate wisdom, which become a free, educated, peaceful Christian people. Even if he battle against criminal ambition and base intrigue, let his weapons be a logic, manly, intrepid, honorable, and an eloquence magnanimous, disinterested, and spotless.

10. What a contrast between his duties and those of Athenian eloquence! where the prince of orators was but the prince of demagogues. How could it be otherwise! with a religion that commanded no virtue, and prohibited no vice; with deities, the model of every crime and folly, which deform and pollute even man; with a social system, in which refinement, benevolence, forbearance, found no place. How could it be otherwise! with a political system, in which war was the chief element of power and honor in the individual, and of strength, security, and glory in the state; while the ambition or resentment of rulers found a cheerful response in the love of conquest, plunder, or revenge on the part of the people.

11. How could it be otherwise ! with such domestic relations between the republics as made it the duty of the ancient orator to aggrandize his own at the expense of all the rest, to set state against state, to foment jealousies and bickerings among them, to deceive and weaken the strong, to oppress and seize on the feeble. How could it be otherwise ! when such were the domestic and foreign relations, viewed as a whole, that the duty of the ancient orator was to cultivate the union of the states, not as a matter of deep and lasting importance at home, not as the very life of peace and harmony there, but only as an expedient against foreign invasion, while partial and hostile combinations, headed by Athens, or Thebes, or Sparta, were the current events of their domestic policy.

12. Compared to such duties and such scenes, who can turn to the obligations and field of American eloquence, without a thrill of spirit-stirring admiration and gratitude ? His office in our union, how full of benignity and peace, of justice, majesty, and truth ! Where, except in the Christian pulpit, shall we find its parallel ? And why do we find it there ? but that the Christian ministry are, like him, the advocates of purity, forbearance and love. How delightful, how honorable the task, to calm the angry passions, to dissipate error, to reconcile prejudice, to banish jealousy, and silence the voice of selfishness !

13. But American eloquence must likewise cultivate a fixed, unalterable devotion to the union, a frank, generous, ardent attachment of section to section, of state to state : and in the citizen, liberal sentiments towards his rulers, and cordial love for his countrymen. Nor is this all. Let the American orator comprehend, and live up to the grand conception, that the union is the property of the world, no less than of ourselves ; that it is a part of the divine scheme for the moral government of the earth, as the solar system is a part of the mechanism of the heavens ; that it is destined, whilst traveling from the Atlantic to the Pacific, like the ascending sun, to shed its glorious influence backward on the states of Europe, and forward on the empires of Asia.

14. Let him comprehend its sublime relations to time and eternity ; to God and man ; to the most precious hopes, the most solemn obligations, and the highest happiness of human kind. And what an eloquence must that be whose source of power and wisdom are God himself, the objects of whose influence are all the nations of the earth ; whose sphere of duty is co-extensive with all that is sublime in religion, beautiful in morals, commanding in intellect, and touching in humanity. How comprehensive, and therefore how wise and benevolent, must then be the genius of American eloquence, compared to the narrow-minded, narrow-hearted, and therefore selfish, eloquence of Greece and Rome.

15. How striking is the contrast, between the universal social spirit of the former, and the individual, exclusive character of the latter. The boundary of this is the horizon of a plain; the circle of that the horizon of a mountain summit. Be it then the duty of American eloquence to speak, to write, to act, in the cause of Christianity, patriotism, and literature; in the cause of justice, humanity, virtue, and truth; in the cause of the people, of the union, of the whole human race, and of the unborn of every clime and age. Then shall American eloquence, the personification of truth, beauty, and love,

“———walk the earth, that she may hear her name
Still hymn'd and honor'd by the grateful voice
Of human kind, and in her fame rejoice.”

QUESTION.—1. How shall the orator be regarded who attempts to dissolve the union? 2. Suppose he believe a separation desirable, what shall he do with his opinion? 3. Why is freedom of speech and the press allowed both to bad and good? 4. What feeling towards the union must be cherished in every American bosom? 5. How should the American regard party spirit, and the arts of demagogues? 6. To what sentiments of the human mind should he always appeal, and to what others never? 7. Contrast the American with the Athenian orator, 10-13. 8. While the orator cherishes union of state to state, of section to section, how shall he regard the country in respect to the world? 9. To time—eternity? 10. Sum up the contrast contained in the close of this lesson, between what ancient eloquence was, and what American eloquence ought to be.

ERRORS.—gib-bet-ed ought to be pronounced jib-bet-ted; 'lus-tra-ous for il-lus-tri-ous; mon-er-ment for mon-u-ment; ir-re-vo-ca-ble for ir-rev'o-ca-ble; for-got for for-got-ten; zas-per-ate for ex-as-per-ate.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. disinterested; 2. gibbeted, independent, dissolution; 3. monarchist, aristocrat, confederacy; 4. irrevocable; 5. indissoluble, dissimulation; 10. demagogues; 11. combinations; 14. comprehend.

LESSON XCIV.

RULE.—Be careful to give the vowels their proper sound.

The Patriotism of Western Literature.

DR. DRAKE.

1. Our literature cannot fail to be patriotic, and its patriotism will be American—composed of a love of country, mingled with an admiration for our political institutions.

2. The slave, whose very mind has passed under the yoke, and the senseless ox, whom he goads onward in the furrow, are attached to the spot of their animal companionship, and may even fight for the cabin and the field where they came into existence; but this affection, considered as an ingredient of patriotism, although the most universal, is the lowest; and to rise into a virtue it must be discriminating and comprehensive, involving a varied association of ideas, and embracing the beautiful of the natural and moral world, as they appear around us.

3. To feel in his heart, and infuse into his writings, the inspiration of such a patriotism, the scholar must feast his taste on the delicacies of our scenery, and dwell with enthusiasm on the genius of our constitution and laws. Thus sanctified in its character, this sentiment becomes a principle of moral and intellectual dignity—an element of fire, purifying and subliming the mass in which it glows.

4. As a guiding star to the will, its light is inferior only to that of Christianity. Heroic in its philanthropy, untiring in its enterprises, and sublime in the martyrdoms it willingly suffers, it justly occupies a high place among the virtues which ennoble the human character. A literature, animated with this patriotism, is a national blessing, and such will be the literature of the West.

5. The literature of the whole Union must be richly endowed with this spirit; but a double portion will be the lot of the interior, because the foreign influences, which dilute and vitiate this virtue in the extremities, cannot reach the heart of the continent, where all that lives and moves is American.

6. Hence a native of the West may be confided in as his country's hope. Compare him with the native of a great maritime city, on the verge of the nation,—his birth-place the fourth story of a house, hemmed in by surrounding edifices, his play-ground a pavement, the scene of his juvenile rambles an arcade of shops, his young eyes feasted on the flags of a hundred alien governments, the streets in which he wanders crowded with foreigners, and the ocean, common to all nations, forever expanding to his view.

7. Estimate his love of country, as far as it depends on local and early attachments, and then contrast him with the young backwoodsman, born and reared amidst objects, scenes, and events, which you can all bring to mind;—the jutting rocks in the great road, half alive with organic remains, or sparkling with crystals; the quiet old walnut tree, dropping its nuts upon the yellow leaves, as the morning sun melts the October frost; the grape-vine swing; the chase after the cowardly black snake, till it creeps under the rotten log; the sitting down to rest upon the crumbling trunk, and an idle examination of the mushrooms and mosses which grow from its ruins.

8. Then the wading in the shallow stream, and upturning of the flat stones, to find bait with which to fish in the deeper waters; next the plunder of a bird's nest, to make necklaces of the speckled eggs, for her who has plundered him of his young heart; then the beech tree with its smooth body, on which he cuts the initials of her name interlocked with his own; finally, the great hollow stump, by the path that leads up the valley to the log school-house, its dry bark peeled off, and the stately polk-weed growing from its center, and bending with crimson berries: which invite him to sit down and write upon its polished wood, how much pleasanter it is to extract ground squirrels from beneath its roots, than to extract the square root, under that labor-saving machine, the ferule of a teacher!

9. The affections of one who is blest with such reminiscences, like the branches of our beautiful trumpet flower, strike their roots into every surrounding object, and derive support from all which stand within their reach. The love of country is with him a constitutional and governing principle. If he be a mechanic, the wood and iron which he moulds into form, are dear to his heart, because they remind him of his own hills and forests; if a husbandman, he holds companionship with growing corn, as the offspring of his native soil; if a legislator, his dreams are filled with sights of national prosperity to flow from his beneficent enactments; if a scholar, devoted to the interests of literature, in his lone and excited hours of midnight study, while the winds are hushed and all animated nature sleeps, when the silence is so profound, that the stroke of his own pen grates, loud and harsh, upon his ear, and fancy, from the great deep of his luminous intellect, draws up new forms of smiling beauty and solemn grandeur; the genius of his country hovers nigh, and sheds over its pages an essence of patriotism, sweeter than the honey-dew which the summer night distils upon the leaves of our forest trees.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is American patriotism? 2. Where is this kind of patriotism most likely to be found? in the cities of the sea-shore, or in the West? 3. What are the causes which make it greater in the West?

ERRORS.—cum-po-sed for com-po-sed; com-pra-hen-sive for com-pre-hen-sive; dil-ute for di-lute; na-tive for na-tive.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. patriotism; 2. discriminating; 3. intellectual; 6. arcade; 7. backwoods; 8. initials; 9. reminiscences, constitutional.

LESSON XCV.

RULE.—In poetry that does not rhyme, no pause need be made at the end of such lines as terminate with unimportant words, except when the sense requires it.

Rome:—BYRON.

1. Oh Rome! my country! city of the soul!
The orphans of the heart must turn to thee,
Lone mother of dead empires! and control
In their shut breasts their petty misery.
What are our woes and sufferance? Come and see
The cypress, hear the owl, and plod your way
O'er steps of broken thrones, and temples, ye!
Whose agonies are evils of a day—
A world is at our feet, as fragile as our clay.
2. The Niobe of nations! there she stands,
Childless, and crownless, in her voiceless woe;
An empty urn within her withered hands,
Whose holy dust was scattered long ago;
The Scipios' tomb contains no ashes now;
The very sepulchers are tenantless
Of their heroic dwellers; dost thou flow,
Old Tiber! through a marble wilderness?
Rise, with thy yellow waves, and mantle her distress!

3. The Goth, the Christian, Time, War, Flood, and Fire,
Have dealt upon the seven hilled city's pride ;
She saw her glories star by star expire,
And up the steep, barbarian monarchs ride,
Where the car climbed the Capitol : far and wide
Temple and tower went down, nor left a site :—
Chaos of ruins ! who shall trace the void,
O'er the dim fragments cast a lunar light,
And say here " was, or is " where all is doubly night.
4. The double night of ages, and of her
Night's daughter, ignorance, hath wrapt and wrap
All round us ; we but feel our way to err,
The ocean hath his chart, the stars their map,
And knowledge spreads them on her ample lap ;
But Rome is as the desert, where we steer
Stumbling o'er recollections ; now we clap
Our hands, and cry, " Eureka !" it is clear—
When but some false mirage of ruin rises near.
5. Alas ! the lofty city ! and alas !
The trebly hundred triumphs ! and the day
When Brutus made the dagger's edge surpass
The conqueror's sword in bearing fame away !
Alas, for Tully's voice, and Virgil's lay,
And Livy's pictured page !—but these shall be
Her resurrection ; all beside—decay.
Alas, for earth, for never shall we see
That brightness in her eye she bore, when Rome was free.
6. Oh thou, whose chariot rolled on fortune's wheel,
Triumphant Sylla ! thou, who did'st subdue
Thy country's foes, ere thou would'st pause to feel
The wrath of thy own wrongs, or reap the due
Of hoarded vengeance, till thine eagles flew
O'er prostrate Asia ;—thou who with thy frown
Annihilatedst senates ;—Roman, too,
With all thy vices, for thou did'st lay down,
With an atoning smile, a more than earthly crown
7. The dictatorial wreath—could'st thou divine
To what would one day dwindle that which made
Thee more than mortal ? and that so supine
By aught than Romans, Rome should thus be laid ?
She who was named eternal, and arrayed
Her warriors but to conquer—she who veiled
Earth with her haughty shadow, and displayed,
Until the o'ercanopied horizon failed,
Her rushing wings. * * *
8. Yes ! let the winds howl on ! their harmony
Shall henceforth be my music, and the night
The sound shall temper with the owl's cry,
As now I hear them, in the fading light

Dim o'er the bird of darkness' native site,
 Answering each other on the Palatine,
 With their large eyes, all glistening gray and bright,
 And sailing pinions. Upon such a shrine
 What are our petty griefs? Let me not number mine.

9. Cypress and ivy, weed and wall-flower grown
 Matted and massed together, hillocks heaped
 On what were chambers, arch crushed, column strown
 In fragments, choked up vaults, and frescos steeped
 In subterranean damp, where the owl peeped,
 Deeming it midnight;—temples, baths, or halls?
 Pronounce who can; for all that learning reaped
 From her research hath been, that these are walls—
 Behold the Imperial Mount!—'tis thus the mighty falls.
10. There is a moral of all human tales;
 'Tis but the same rehearsal of the past,
 First Freedom, and then Glory—when that fails,
 Wealth, vice, corruption,—barbarism at last,
 And History with all her volumes vast,
 Hath but one page,—'tis better written here,
 Where gorgeous tyranny had thus amassed
 All treasures, all delights, that eye or ear,
 Heart, soul could seek, tongue ask—Away with words!
 draw near,
11. Admire, exult—despise—laugh—weep—for here
 There is much matter for all feeling;—Man!
 Thou pendulum betwixt a smile and tear,
 Ages and realms, are crowded in this span,
 This mountain, whose obliterated plan
 The pyramid of empires pinnacled,
 Of glory's gew-gaws shining in the van,
 Till the sun's rays with added flame were filled!
 Where are its golden roofs? where those who dared to build?
12. Tully was not so eloquent as thou,
 Thou nameless column, with the buried base!
 What are the laurels of the Cæsar's brow?
 Crown me with ivy, from his dwelling place.
 Whose arch or pillar meets me in the face,
 Titus' or Trajan's? No! 'tis that of time;
 Triumph, arch, pillar, all he doth displace,
 Scoffing; and apostolic statues climb
 To crush the imperial urn,* whose ashes slept sublime.
13. Where is the rock of triumph, the high place
 Where Rome embraced her heroes? Where the steep
 Tarpeian? fittest goal of treason's race,
 The promontory, whence the traitor's leap

* Trajan's.

Cured all ambition ; did the conquerors heap
 Their spoils here ? Yes ! and in yon field below,
 A thousand years of silenced factions sleep—
 The Forum, where immortal accents glow,
 And still the eloquent air breathes—burns with Cicero !

QUESTIONS.—1. Why does Byron call Rome “my country ?” 2. Who was Niobe, and what her story ? 3. How is Rome the Niobe of nations ? 4. Upon what site was Rome built ? 5. What “double night” rests upon Rome ? 6. What ancient Grecian exclaimed “Eureka,” and why ? 7. What great men of Rome are mentioned in verse 5 ? 8. What is narrated of Sylla in verses 6 and 7 ? 9. Is Rome a mere mass of ruins ? or are these descriptions of parts of the city ? 10. In verse 10 what moral is drawn from the rehearsal of the past ? 11. What beautiful metaphor in verse 11 ? 12. What is said of the imperial urn, and what fact referred to ? 13. What is said of the Forum ? 14. What was the forum ? 15. What was the Tarpeian ?

ERRORS.—Ni-obe for Ni-o-be ; chile-less for child-less ; Skip-i-o for Scip-i-o ; chris-chin for chris-tian (christ-yan.)

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. cypress, fragile ; 2. crownless, voiceless, sepulchers ; 3. barbarian, fragments, lunar ; 4. stumbling, recollections, 5. hundred, triumphs ; 6. triumphant, annihilatedst ; 7. dictatorial, o'ercanopied ; 8. harmony, palatine ; 9. subterranean ; 10. rehearsal ; 11. pyramid ; 13. Tarpeian.

LESSON XCVI.

RULE.—Be careful not to slip over or mispronounce the small words.

Rebellion in Massachusetts State Prison.

BUCKINGHAM.

1. A more impressive exhibition of moral courage, opposed to the wildest ferocity, under the most appalling circumstances, was never seen, than that which was witnessed, by the officers of our State Prison, in the rebellion which occurred about five years since.

2. Three convicts had been sentenced under the rules of the prison to be whipped in the yard, and by some effort of one of the other prisoners, a door had been opened at mid-day, communicating with the great dining hall, and through the warden's lodge with the street.

3. The dining hall is long, dark and damp, from its situation near the surface of the ground; and in this all the prisoners assembled, with clubs and such tools as they could seize in passing through the work-shops.

4. Knives, hammers, and chisels, with every variety of such weapons, were in the hands of the ferocious spirits, who are drawn away from their encroachments on society, forming a congregation of strength, vileness, and talent, that can hardly be equaled on earth, even among the famed brigands of Italy.

5. Men of all ages and characters, guilty of every variety of infamous crime, dressed in the motley and peculiar garb of the institution, and displaying the wild and demoniac appearance that always pertains to imprisoned wretches, were gathered together for the single purpose of preventing the punishment which was to be inflicted on the morrow, upon their comrades.

6. The warden, the surgeon, and some other officers of the prison, were there at the time, and were alarmed at the consequences likely to ensue from the conflict necessary to restore order. They huddled together, and could scarcely be said to consult, as the stoutest among them lost all presence of mind in overwhelming fear. The news rapidly spread through the town, and a subordinate officer, of most mild and kind disposition, hurried to the scene, and came calm and collected into the midst of the officers. The most equable tempered and the mildest man in the government was in this hour of peril the firmest.

7. He instantly despatched a request to Major Wainwright, commander of the marines stationed at the navy yard, for assistance, and declared his purpose to enter into the hall and try the force of firm demeanor and persuasion upon the enraged multitude.

8. All his brethren exclaimed against an attempt so full of hazard; but in vain. They offered him arms, a sword and pistols, but he refused them, and said, that he had no fear, and in case of danger, arms would do him no service: and alone, with only a little rattan, which was his usual walking stick, he advanced into the hall, to hold parley with the selected, congregated, and enraged villains of the whole commonwealth.

9. He demanded their purpose, in thus coming together with arms, in violation of the prison laws. They replied that they were determined to obtain the remission of the punishment of their three comrades. He said, it was impossible, the rules of the prison must be obeyed, and they must submit.

10. At the hint of submission, they drew a little nearer together, prepared their weapons for service, and, as they were dimly seen in the further end of the hall, by those who observed, from the gratings that opened up to the day, a more appalling sight cannot be conceived, nor one of more moral grandeur, than that of the single man, standing within their grasp, and exposed to be torn limb from limb instantly, if a word or look should add to the already intense excitement.

11. That excitement, too, was of a most dangerous kind. It broke not forth in noise and imprecations, but was seen only in the dark looks and the strained nerves, that showed a deep determination. The officer expostulated. He reminded them of the hopelessness of escape; that the town was alarmed, and that the government of the prison would submit to nothing but unconditional surrender. He said, that all those who would go quietly away, should be forgiven for this offence; but that, if every prisoner was killed in the contest, power enough would be obtained to enforce the regulations of the prison.

12. They replied, that they expected that some would be killed, that death would be better than such imprisonment, and with that look and tone, which bespeaks an indomitable purpose, they declared, that not a man should leave the hall alive, till the flogging was remitted. At this period of the discussion, their evil passions seemed to be more inflamed, and one or two offered to destroy the officer, who still stood firmer, and with a more temperate pulse, than did his friends who saw from above, but could not avert the danger that threatened him.

13. Just at this moment, and in about fifteen minutes from the commencement of the tumult, the officer saw the feet of the marines, whose presence alone he relied on for succor, filing by the small upper lights. Without any apparent anxiety he had repeatedly turned his attention to their approach, and now he knew that it was his only time to escape, before a conflict for life became, as was expected, one of the most dark and dreadful in the world.

14. He stepped slowly backwards, still urging them to depart, before the officers were driven to use the last resort of fire-arms. When within three or four feet of the door, it was opened, and closed instantly again, as he sprang through, and was thus unexpectedly restored to his friends.

15. Major Wainwright was requested to order his men to fire down upon the convicts through the little windows, first with powder and then with ball, till they were willing to retreat: but he took a wiser as well as a bolder course, relying upon the effect which firm determination would have upon men so critically situated. He ordered the door to be again opened, and marched in at the head of twenty or thirty men, who filed through the passage and formed at the end of the hall, opposite to the crowd of criminals huddled together at the other.

16. He stated that he was empowered to quell the rebellion, that he wished to avoid shedding blood, but that he should not quit that hall alive, till every convict had returned to his duty. They seemed balancing the strength of the two parties; and replied, that some of them were ready to die, and only waited for an attack to see which was the most powerful, swearing that they would fight to the last, unless the punishment was remitted, for they would not submit to any such punishment in the prison. Major Wainwright ordered his marines to load their pieces, and, that they might not be suspected of trifling, each man was made to hold up to view the bullet which he afterwards put in his gun.

17. This only caused a growl of determination, and no one blenched or seemed disposed to shrink from the foremost exposure. They knew that their number would enable them to bear down and destroy the handful of marines, after the first discharge, and before their pieces could be reloaded. Again they were ordered to retire; but they answered with more ferocity than ever. The marines were ordered to take their aim so as to be sure and kill as many as possible—their guns were presented—but not a prisoner stirred, except to grasp more firmly his weapon.

18. Still desirous to avoid such a tremendous slaughter, as must have followed the discharge of a single gun, Major Wainwright advanced a step or two, and spoke even more firmly than before, urging them to depart. Again, and while looking directly into the muzzles of the guns, which they had seen loaded with ball, they declared their intention "to fight it out." This intrepid officer then took out his watch, and told his men to hold their pieces aimed at the convicts, but not to fire till they had orders; then turning to the prisoners, he said, "You must leave this hall—I give you three minutes to decide—if at the end of that time a man remains, he shall be shot dead."

19. No situation of greater interest than this can be conceived. At one end of the hall a fearful multitude of the most desperate and powerful men in existence, waiting for the assault—at the other, a little band of disciplined men, waiting with arms presented, and ready, upon the least motion or sign, to begin the carnage; and their tall and imposing commander, holding up his watch to count the lapse of three minutes, given as the reprieve to the lives of hundreds. No poet or painter can conceive of a spectacle of more dark and terrible sublimity—no human heart can conceive a situation of more appalling suspense.

20. For two minutes not a person nor a muscle was moved, not a sound was heard in the unwonted stillness of the prison, except the labored breathings of the infuriated wretches, as they began to pant, between fear and revenge—at the expiration of two minutes, during which they had faced the ministers of death, with unblenching eyes, two or three of those in the rear and nearest the further entrance, went slowly out—a few more followed the example, dropping out quietly and deliberately, and before half of the last minute had gone, every man was struck by the panic, and crowded for an exit; and the hall was cleared as if by magic. Thus the steady firmness of moral force, and the strong effect of determination, acting deliberately, awed the most savage men, and suppressed a scene of carnage, which would have instantly followed the least precipitancy or exertion of physical force.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is the use of the State Prison? 2. Where is the Penitentiary of this State? 3. What accounts for the conduct of the subordinate officer, who, though ordinarily the mildest, was on this occasion the firmest? 4. Suppose Major W. had fired through the windows, as he was advised, what would have been, in all probability, the result? 5. Narrate the substance of the 19th and 20th paragraphs. 6. What gained this bloodless victory?

ERRORS.—ap-pal-ing for ap-pall-ing; sence for since; con-vics for con-victs; sit-oo-a-tion for sit-u-a-tion; weep-on for for weap-on (pronounced wep-on); strenth for strength; geth-er-ed for gath-er-ed; temp'-rit for tem-pe-rate; jist and jest for just.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. impressive, ferocity, appalling, rebellion; 4. encroachment, brigands; 5. motley, demoniac; 6. warden, subordinate; 7. demeanor; 11. expostulated; 12. indomitable; 16. empowered; 17. blenched; 19. sublimity; 20. precipitancy.

Prince Arthur.—SHAKSPEARE.

Hubert. Heat me these irons hot; and, look thou stand
 Within the arras; when I strike my foot
 Upon the bosom of the ground, rush forth,
 And bind the boy, which you shall find with me,
 Fast to the chair: be heedful: hence, and watch.

First Attendant. I hope your warrant will bear out the deed.

Hub. Uncleanly scruples! Fear not you: look to it.—

(Exeunt Attendants.)

Young lad, come forth; I have to say with you.

(Enter Arthur.)

Arthur. Good-morrow, Hubert.

Hub. Good-morrow, little prince.

Arth. As little prince (having so great a title
 To be more prince) as may be;—You are sad.

Hub. Indeed, I have been merrier.

Arth. Mercy on me!

Methinks no person should be sad but I:
 Yet I remember, when I was in France,
 Young gentlemen would be as sad as night,
 Only for wantonness. By my christendom,
 So I were out of prison, and kept sheep,
 I should be merry as the day is long;
 And so I would be here, but that I doubt
 My uncle practises more harm to me:
 He is afraid of me, and I of him:
 Is it my fault that I were Geoffrey's son?
 No, indeed, is't not; and I would to heaven
 I were your son, so you would love me, Hubert.

Hub. If I talk to him, with his innocent prate
 He will awake my mercy, which lies dead:
 Therefore I will be sudden, and despatch.

Arth. Are you sick, Hubert? You look pale to-day.
 In sooth, I would you were a little sick;
 That I might sit all night, and watch with you.
 I warrant I love you more than you do me.

Hub. His words do take possession of my bosom.—

(Asiaz.)

Read here, young Arthur. (Showing a paper.) How now, foolish rheum! (Aside.)

Turning spiteous torture out the door!

I must be brief; lest resolution drop

Out at mine eyes, in tender womanish tears.—

Can you not read it? Is it not fair writ?

Arth. Too fairly, Hubert, for so foul effect:

Must you with hot irons burn out both mine eyes?

Hub. Young boy, I must.

Arth. And will you?

Hub. And I will.

Arth. Have you the heart? When your head did but ache,

I knit my handkerchief about your brows,

(The best I had, a princess wrought it me,)

And I did never ask it you again:

And with my hand at midnight held your head,

And like the watchful minutes to the hour,

Still and anon cheered up the heavy time;

Saying, What lack you? and, Where lies your grief?

Or, What good love may I perform for you?

Many a poor man's son would have lain still,

And ne'er have spoke a loving word to you;

But you at your sick service had a prince.

Nay, you may think my love was crafty love,

And call it cunning: do, and if you will:

If heaven be pleased that you should use me ill,

Why, then you must.—Will you put out mine eyes?

These eyes, that never did, nor never shall,

So much as frown on you?

Hub. I have sworn to do it;

And with hot irons must I burn them out.

Arth. Ah, none but in this iron age would do it:

The iron of itself, though heat red-hot,

Approaching near these eyes, would drink my tears,

And quench its fiery indignation,

Even in the matter of mine innocence:

Nay, after that, consume away in rust,

But for containing fire to harm mine eye.

Are you more stubborn-hard than hammered iron?

And if an angel should have come to me,

And told me Hubert should put out mine eyes,

I would not have believed no tongue but Hubert's.

Hub. Come forth. (Stamps.)

(Re-enter Attendants, with cord, irons, &c.)

Do as I bid you.

Arth. Oh, save me, Hubert, save me! My eyes are out,

Even with the fierce looks of the bloody men.

Hub. Give me the iron, I say, and bind him here.

Arth. Alas! what need you be so boisterous-rough?

I will not struggle, I will stand stone-still.

For heaven's sake, Hubert! let me not be bound!

Nay, hear me, Hubert! drive these men away,

And I will sit as quiet as a lamb :
 I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word,
 Nor look upon the irons angrily ;
 Thrust but these men away, and I'll forgive you,
 Whatever torment you do put me to.

Hub. Go stand within ; let me alone with him.

First Attend. I am best pleased to be from such a deed.

(Exeunt Attendants.)

Arth. Alas ! I then have chid away my friend :
 He hath a stern look, but a gentle heart :—
 Let him come back, that his compassion may Give life to yours.

Hub. Come, boy, prepare yourself.

Arth. Is there no remedy ?

Hub. None, but to lose your eyes.

Arth. Oh heaven ! that there were but a mote in yours,
 A grain, a dust, a gnat, a wandering hair,
 Any annoyance in that precious sense !
 Then, feeling what small things are boisterous there,
 Your vile intent must needs seem horrible.

Hub. Is this your promise ? Go to, hold your tongue.

Arth. Hubert, the utterance of a brace of tongues
 Must needs want pleading for a pair of eyes :
 Let me not hold my tongue ; let me not, Hubert !
 Or, Hubert, if you will, cut out my tongue,
 So I may keep mine eyes ; Oh, spare mine eyes,
 Though to no use, but still to look on you !
 Lo, by my troth, the instrument is cold,
 And would not harm me.

Hub. I can heat it, boy.

Arth. No, in good sooth, the fire is dead with grief—
 Being create for comfort—to be used
 In undeserved extremes : See else yourself :
 There is no malice in this burning coal ;
 The breath of heaven hath blown its spirit out,
 And strewed repentant ashes on his head.

Hub. But with my breath I can revive it, boy.

Arth. And if you do, you will but make it blush
 And glow with shame of your proceedings, Hubert ;
 Nay, it perchance will sparkle in your eyes,
 And, like a dog, that is compelled to fight,
 Snatch at his master that does tarre* him on.
 All things, that you should use to do me wrong,
 Deny their office ; only you do lack
 That mercy, which fierce fire, and iron extends,— Creatures of note, for mercy-lacking uses.

Hub. Well, see to live ; I will not touch thine eyes
 For all the treasure that thy uncle owns ;
 Yet I am sworn, and I did purpose, boy,
 With this same very iron to burn them out.

Arth. Oh, now you look like Hubert! all this while
You were disguised.

Hub. Peace: no more: Adieu!—
Your uncle must not know but you are dead:
I'll fill these dogged spies with false reports.
And, pretty child, sleep doubtless, and secure
That Hubert, for the wealth of all the world,
Will not offend thee.

Arth. Oh heaven!—I thank you, Hubert.

Hub. Silence: no more. Go closely in with me:
Much danger do I undergo for thee.

QUESTIONS.—1. Who was Prince Arthur? 2. Where did he live?
3. Who was Hubert? 4. Who had instigated Hubert to perpetrate such cruelty? 5. What does Hubert mean in saying, "How now foolish rheum?" 6. Enumerate the motives by which the prince induces Hubert to spare him.

ERRORS.—fers for fierce; an-gel for a'n-gel; spir-it for spir-it;
dan-ger for da'n-ger.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. arras, exeunt, wantonness, dispiteous, indignation, boisterous, wince, angrily.

LESSON XCVIII.

RULE.—In reading poetry, be careful to avoid the sing-song tone which is made by marking too strongly with the voice, all the accented syllables. In the example the fault will appear, if the words italicised are strongly accented.

EXAMPLE.—Sweet is the work my God and King
To praise thy name, give thanks and sing.

The Child's Inquiry.—DOANE.

1. What is that, mother?

The lark, my child.
The morn has just looked out, and smiled,
When he starts from his humble grassy nest,
And is up and away with the dew on his breast,
And a hymn in his heart, to yon pure bright sphere
To warble it out in his Maker's ear.
Ever, my child, be thy morn's first lays,
Tuned, like the lark's, to thy Maker's praise.

2. What is that, mother?

The dove, my son.—
And that low sweet voice, like a widow's moan,

Is flowing out from her gentle breast,
 Constant and pure by that lonely nest,
 As the wave is poured from some crystal urn,
 For her distant dear one's quick return.
 Ever, my son, be thou like the dove;
 In friendship as faithful, as constant in love.

3. What is that, mother?

The eagle, my boy,
 Proudly careering his course of joy,
 Firm, in his own mountain vigor relying;
 Breasting the dark storm; the red bolt defying;
 His wing on the wind, and his eye on the sun,
 He swerves not a hair, but bears onward, right on.
 Boy, may the eagle's flight ever be thine;
 Onward, and upward, and true to the line.

4. What is that, mother?

The swan, my love.
 He is floating down from his native grove,
 No loved one now, no nestling nigh;
 He is floating down by himself, to die.
 Death darkens his eye, and unplumes his wings,
 Yet his sweetest song is the last he sings.
 Live so, my love, that when death shall come,
 Swanlike and sweet it may waft thee home.

QUESTIONS.—1. May we not often derive useful instruction from observation of nature? 2. What lesson is drawn from the lark? 3. What from the dove? 4. The eagle? 5. The swan? 6. What beautiful figure in verse second?

ERRORS.—hime for hymn (pronounced him); pow-er-ed for pour-ed.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. sphere, warble; 2. friendship; 3. careering, swerves; 4. nestling, unplumes.

LESSON XCIX.

RULE.—In reading poetry that rhymes, there should be a slight pause after the words that rhyme, even when the sense does not require it.

Christian Hymn of Triumph; from "The Martyr of Antioch."—MILMAN.

1. Sing to the Lord! let harp, and lute, and voice,
 Up to the expanding gates of heaven rejoice,
 While the bright martyrs to their rest are borne!

Sing to the Lord ! their blood-stained course is run,
 And every head its diadem hath won,
 Rich as the purple of the summer morn—
 Sing the triumphant champions of their God,
 While burn their mounting feet along their sky-ward road.

2. Sing to the Lord ! for her, in beauty's prime,
 Snatched from this wintry earth's ungenial clime,
 In the eternal spring of paradise to bloom ;
 For her the world displayed its brightest treasure,
 And the airs panted with the songs of pleasure.
 Before earth's throne she chose the lowly tomb,
 The vale of tears with willing footsteps trod,
 Bearing her cross with thee, incarnate Son of God.
3. Sing to the Lord ! it is not shed in vain,
 The blood of martyrs ! from its freshening rain
 High springs the church like some fount-shadowing palm :
 The nations crowd beneath its branching shade,
 Of its green leaves are kingly diadems made,
 And, wrapt within its deep, embosoming calm,
 Earth shrinks to slumber like the breezeless deep,
 And war's tempestuous vultures fold their wings and sleep.
4. Sing to the Lord ! no more the angels fly—
 Far in the bosom of the stainless sky—
 The sound of fierce, licentious sacrifice.
 From shrin'd alcove and stately pedestal,
 The marble gods in cumbrous ruin fall ;
 Headless, in dust, the awe of nations lies ;
 Jove's thunder crumbles in his mouldering hand,
 And mute as sepulchers the hymnless temples stand.

QUESTIONS.—1. Explain the last line of the first stanza. 2. Explain the last line of the second. 3. With what propriety can vultures be called "tempestuous?" 4. Who is "Jove?"

ERRORS.—tem-pes-ti-ous and tem-pes-too-ous for tem-pest-u-ous ; vul-ters for vul-tures ; fare for far ; se-pul-chers for sep-ul-chers.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. triumphant, champion, sky-ward ; 2. ungenial, incarnate ; 3. diadem, tempestuous, vultures ; 4. licentious, alcove, pedestal, cumbrous, sepulchers.

LESSON C.

RULE.—When similar sounds come at the end of one word and the beginning of the next word, they must not be blended into one.

EXERCISES.—Malice seeks to destroy.
The breeze sighs softly.
The ice slowly melts.

Charles de Moor's Remorse.—SCHILLER.

1. I must rest here. My joints are shaken asunder. My tongue cleaves to my mouth, it is dry as a potsherd. I would beg of some of you, to fetch me a little water, in the hollow of your hand, from yonder brook; but all of you are weary to death.

2. How glorious, how majestic, yonder setting sun! 'Tis thus the hero falls, 'tis thus he dies,—in godlike majesty! When I was a boy,—a mere child,—it was my favorite thought, to live and die like that sun.

3. 'Twas an idle thought, a boy's conceit. There was a time—leave me, my friends, alone:—there was a time, when I could not sleep, if I had forgot my prayers! Oh that I were a child once more!

4. What a lovely evening! what a pleasing landscape! That scene is noble! this world is beautiful! the earth is grand! But I am hideous in this world of beauty—a monster on this magnificent earth—the prodigal son:—My innocence! Oh my innocence!—All nature expands at the sweet breath of spring: but, Oh God, this paradise—this heaven is a hell to me!—All is happiness around me, all in the sweet spirit of peace; the world is one family, —but its father there above is not my father.

5. I am an outcast—the prodigal son! the companion of murderers, of viperous fiends! bound down enchained to guilt and horror!—Oh! that I could return once more to peace and innocence! that I hung an infant on the breast! that I were born a beggar—the meanest kind—a peasant of the field.

6. I would toil, till the sweat of blood dropt from my brow, to purchase the luxury of one sound sleep, the rapture of a single tear!—There was a time when I could weep with ease. Oh days of bliss! Oh mansion of my fathers! Scenes of my infant years, enjoyed by fond enthusiasm! will you no more return? No more exhale your sweets to cool this burning bosom!

7. Oh ! never, never shall they return ! No more refresh this bosom with the breath of peace. They are gone ! gone forever !

QUESTIONS.—1. Who was Schiller ? 2. Can you conceive of a being so wretched as here represented ?

ERRORS.—pots-herd for pot-sheer ; yer for your ; yan-der, yun-der, and yen-der for yon-der ; fur-got for for-got ; hij-jus for hid-eous ; ex-zale for ex-hale.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. potsherd ; 2. majestic, favorite ; 4. landscape, hideous, magnificent, innocence ; 5. outcast, viperous, enchained ; 6. luxury, rapture, mansion, enthusiasm ; 7. refresh.

LESSON CI.

RULE.—Be careful to give the right sound to the vowel sounds.

Value of Mathematics.—E. D. MANSFIELD.

1. Man may construct his works by irregular and uncertain rules ; but, God has made an unerring law for his whole creation, and made it too in respect to the physical system, upon principles, which, as far as we now know, can never be understood, without the aid of mathematics.

2. Let us suppose a youth who despises, as many do, these cold and passionless abstractions of the mathematics. Yet, he is intellectual ; he loves knowledge ; he would explore nature, and know the reason of things ; but he would do it, without aid from this rigid, syllogistic, measuring, calculating science. He seeks indeed, no “royal road to geometry,” but, he seeks one not less difficult to find, in which geometry is not needed.

3. He begins with the mechanical powers. He takes the lever and readily understands that a weight will move it. But the principle upon which different weights, at different distances move it he is forbidden to know ; for they depend upon ratios and proportions. He passes to the inclined plane ; but quits it in disgust, when he finds its action depends upon the relations of angles and triangles. The screw is still worse, and when he comes to the wheel and axle, he gives them up forever ; they are all mathematical !

4. He would investigate the laws of falling bodies, and moving fluids, and would know why their motion is accelerated at different periods, and upon what their momentum depends. But, roots, and squares, lines, angles and curves float before him in the mazy dance of a disturbed intellect. The very first proposition is a mystery: and he soon discovers, that mechanical philosophy is little better than mathematics itself.

5. But he still has his senses; he will, at least, not be indebted to diagrams and equations for their enjoyment. He gazes with admiration upon the phenomena of light; the many-colored rainbow upon the bosom of the clouds; the clouds themselves reflected with all their changing shades from the surface of the quiet waters. Whence comes this beautiful imagery? He investigates and finds that every hue in the rainbow is made by a different angle of refractions, and that each ray reflected from the mirror, has its angle of incidence equal to its angle of reflection; and as he pursues the subject further, in the construction of lenses and telescopes, the whole family of triangles, ratios, proportions and conclusions arise to alarm his excited vision.

6. He turns to the heavens, and is charmed with its shining host, moving in solemn procession, "through the halls of the sky," each star, as it rises and sets marking time on the records of nature. He would know the structure of this beautiful system, and search out, if possible, the laws which regulate those distant lights. But astronomy forever banishes him from her presence; she will have none near her to whom mathematics is not a familiar friend. What can he know of her parallaxes, anomalies, and precessions, who has never studied the conic sections, or the higher orders of analysis? She sends him to some wooden orrery, from which he may gather as much knowledge of the heavenly bodies, as a child does of armies from the gilded troopers of the toy shop.

7. But if he can have no companionship with optics nor astronomy, nor mechanical philosophy, there are sciences, he thinks, which have better taste and less austerity of manners. He flies to chemistry, and her garments float loosely around him. For a while, he goes gloriously on, illuminated by the red lights and blue lights of crucibles and retorts. But, soon he comes to compound bodies, to the composition of the elements around him, and finds them all in fixed relations. He finds that gasses and fluids will combine with each other, and with solids only in a certain ratio, and that all possible compounds are formed by nature in immutable proportion. Then starts up the whole doctrine of chemical equivalents, and mathematics again stares him in the face.

8. Affrighted he flies to mineralogy; stones he may pick up, jewels he may draw from the bosom of the earth and be no longer alarmed at the stern visage of this terrible science. But, even here, he is not safe. The first stone that he finds—quartz, contains a chrystal, and that chrystal assumes the dreaded form of geometry. Chrystallization allures him on; but, as he goes, cubes and hexagons, pyramids and dodecagons arise before him in beautiful array. He would understand more about them, but, must wait at the portal of the temple, till introduced within, by that honored of time and science, our friendly Euclid.

9. And now, where shall this student of nature without the aid of mathematics, go for his knowledge, or his enjoyments? Is it to natural history? The very birds cleave the air in the form of the cycloid, and mathematics prove it the best. Their feathers are formed upon calculated mechanical principles; the muscles of their frame are moved by them; the little bee has constructed his cell in the very geometrical figure, and with the precise angles, which mathematicians, after ages of investigation, have demonstrated to be that which contains the greatest economy of space and strength.—Yes!—he who would shun mathematics must fly the bounds of “flaming space,” and in the realms of chaos, that, where Milton's Satan wandered from the wrath of heaven, he may possibly find some spot visited by no figure of geometry, and no harmony of proportion. But nature, this beautiful creation of God, has no resting place for him. All its construction is mathematical; all its uses reasonable; all its ends harmonious. It has no elements mixed without regulated law; no broken chord to make a false note in the music of the spheres.

“————— dark,
Illimitable ocean, ———”

QUESTIONS.—1. How is it illustrated, that without mathematics, it is impossible for the student to understand the principles of the physical system? 2. Suppose he turns to mechanics? 3. Suppose he trusts to the senses? 4. Turns to chimistry? 5. To mineralogy? 6. To natural history?

ERRORS.—er-reg-'lar for ir-reg-u-lar; syl-li-gis-tic for syl-lo-gis-tic.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. mathematics; 2. syllogistic, abstractions, geometry; 3. mechanical, proportions; 4. momentum, philosophy; 5. diagrams, equations, phenomena, imagery, refraction, telescopes; 6. parallaxes, anomalies, precessions; 7. companionship, composition, immutably; 8. cycloid, illimitable.

LESSON CII.

RULE.—Do not slide over the little words, nor omit any syllable of any word.

Value of Mathematics.—CONTINUED.

1. Let us take another student, with whom mathematics is neither despised nor neglected. He sees in it the means of past success to others; he reads in its history the progress of universal improvement; and he believes that what has contributed so much to the civilization of the world, what is even now contributing so much to all that humanizes society; and what the experience of all mankind has sanctioned, may perchance, be useful to his own intellectual development.

2. He opens a volume of geometry, and steadily pursues its abstractions from the definition of a right line, through the elegant properties of the right angled triangle; the relations of similar figures, and the laws of curved surfaces. He finds a chain of unbroken and impregnable reasoning; and is at once possessed of all the knowledge of postulates, syllogisms and conclusions, which the most accomplished school of rhetoric could have taught him.

3. He looks upon society, and wherever he turns, arts, sciences, and their results, from carpentry to civil engineering; from architecture to hydraulics; from the ingenious lock upon a canal, to the useful mill upon its sides, disclose their operations, no longer mysterious to his enlightened understanding. Many a interesting repository of knowledge this key has opened to his vision, and as he thus walks through the vestibule of science, he longs to penetrate those deep aisles and ascend that magnificent stairway, which lead up to the structure of the universe.

4. With the properties of the ellipsis, the laws of motion demonstrated by mathematics, and two facts drawn from observation, the one that bodies fall towards the earth, and the other, the regular motion of the planets, he demonstrates beyond the power of refutation, the laws of the celestial system. He traces star after star, however eccentric their course, through the unseen immensity of space, and calculates with unfailing certainty, the hour of its return, after ages have passed away.

5. He does more, he weighs matter in the balances of creation, and finds that to complete the harmony of the system, a planet is wanting in some distant corner of its wide domain;—no mortal eye has ever seen it, no tradition tells of its existence. Yet, with the confidence and zeal of prophecy, he announces that it must exist, for demonstration has proved it. The prediction is recorded in the volume of science.

6. Long after, astronomy, by the aid of mathematics, discovers the long lost tenant of the skies; and fractured though it be, while its members perform their revolution, no living soul can be permitted to doubt the worth of mathematics, or the powers of his own immortal mind.

7. And what were the glorious contemplations of that pupil of mathematical philosophy, as he passed behind the clouds of earth to investigate the machinery of celestial spheres! Alone, yet not solitary, amidst the glowing lights of heaven, he sends his spirit forth through the works of God. He has risen by the force of cultivated intellect to heights which mortal fancy had never reached.

8. He has taken line and figure and measure, and from proposition to proposition, and from conclusion to conclusion, riveting link after link, he has bound the universe to the throne of its creator, by that “ ————— golden, everlasting chain,

Whose strong embrace holds heaven and earth and main.”

9. And is there no moral instruction in this? Does he learn no lesson of wisdom? Do no strong emotions of love and gratitude arise towards that being who thus delights him with the charms of intellectual enjoyment, and blesses him with the multiplied means of happiness? Harder than the adamant of his own reasoning—colder than the abstractions in which he is falsely supposed to move, must be he who thus conducted by the handmaid of the arts and sciences, through whatever humanizes man; through whatever is sublime in his progress to a higher state; through all the vast machinery, which the Almighty has made tributary to his comfort, and its happiness, yet feels no livelier sentiment of duty towards him; no kinder or more peaceful spirit towards his fellow man.

QUESTIONS.—1. In what light does the student regard mathematics? 2. Can you sketch his career? 3. What is the moral instruction to be derived from this?

ERRORS.—pro-gress for prog-ress; div-el-up-munt for de-vel-op-ment; suf-fa-ses for sur-fa-ces.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. civilization, humanizes; 2. impregnable, postulates, accomplished; 3. engineering, architecture, hydraulics, vestibule; 4. ellipsis, demonstrated; 5. prophecy; 8. universe; 9. adamant.

LESSON CIII.

RULE.—In reading poetry that does not rhyme, there should be no pause at the end of a line, except when it terminates with an important word, or the sense requires it.

Washing Day.—MRS. HEMANS.

1. The Muses are turned gossips ; they have lost
The buskined step, and clear high-sounding phrase,
Language of Gods. Come then, domestic Muse,
In slipshod measure loosely prattling on
5. Of farm or orchard, pleasant curds and cream,
Or drowning flies, or shoe lost in the mire
By little whimpering boy, with rueful face ;
Come, Muse, and sing the dreaded Washing-Day.
Ye who beneath the yoke of wedlock bend,
10. With bowed soul, full well ye know the day
Which week, smooth sliding after week, brings on Too soon ;—for to that day nor peace belongs
Nor comfort ;—ere the first gray streak of dawn,
The red-armed washers come and chase repose.
15. Nor pleasant smile, nor quaint device of mirth,
E'er visited that day : the very cat,
From the wet kitchen scared, and reeking hearth,
Visits the parlor,—an unwonted guest.
'The silent breakfast-meal is soon despatched ;
20. Uninterrupted, save by anxious looks
Cast at the lowering sky, if sky should lower.
From that last evil, O preserve us, heavens !
For should the skies pour down, adieu to all
Remains of quiet : then expect to hear
25. Of sad disasters,—dirt and gravel stains
Hard to efface, and loaded lines at once
Snapped short,—and linen-horse by dog thrown down,
And all the petty miseries of life.
Saints have been calm while stretched upon the rack,
30. And Guatimozin smiled on burning coals ;
But never yet did housewife notable
Greet with a smile a rainy washing-day.
—But grant the welkin fair, require not thou
Who call'st thyself perchance the master there,
35. Or study swept, or nicely dusted coat,
Or usual 'tendance ;—ask not, indiscreet,
Thy stockings mended, though the yawning rents
Gape wide as Erebus ; nor hope to find
Some snug recess impervious : shouldst thou try
40. The 'customed garden walks, thine eye shall rue
The budding fragrance of thy tender shrubs,
Myrtle or rose, all crushed beneath the weight
Of coarse checked apron,—with impatient hand
Twitched off when showers impend : or crossing lines

45. Shall mar thy musings, as the wet cold sheet
Flaps in thy face abrupt. Woe to the friend
Whose evil stars have urged him forth to claim
On such a day the hospitable rites !
Looks, blank at best, and stinted courtesy,
50. Shall he receive. Vainly he feeds his hopes
With dinner of roast chickens, savory pie,
Or tart or pudding :—pudding he nor tart
That day shall eat : nor, though the husband try,
Mending what can't be helped, to kindle mirth
55. From cheer deficient, shall his consort's brow
Clear up propitious :—the unlucky guest
In silence dines, and early slinks away.
I well remember when a child, the awe
This day struck into me ; for then the maids,
60. I scarce knew why, looked cross, and drove me from them :
Nor soft caress could I obtain, nor hope
Usual indulgences ; jelly or creams,
Relic of costly suppers, and set by
For me their petted one ; or buttered toast,
65. When butter was forbid ; or thrilling tale
Of ghost or witch, or murder—so I went
And sheltered me beside the parlor fire :
There my dear grandmother, eldest of forms,
Tended the little ones, and watched from harm,
70. Anxiously fond, though oft her spectacles
With elfin cunning hid, and oft the pins
Drawn from her raveled stockings, might have soured
One less indulgent.—
At intervals my mother's voice was heard,
75. Urging despatch : briskly the work went on,
All hands employed to wash, to rinse, to wring,
To fold, and starch, and clap, and iron, and plait.
Then would I sit me down and ponder much
Why washings were. Sometimes through hollow bowl
80. Of pipe amused we blew, and sent aloft
The floating bubbles ; little dreaming then
To see, Mongolfier, thy silken ball
Ride buoyant through the clouds—so near approach
The sports of children and the toils of men.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is meant by “buskined step ?” 2. Who was Guatimozin ? and what his history ? 3. What was Erebus ? 4. Who was Mongolfier ?

ERRORS.—cruds for curds ; hurth for hearth ; scurs for scarce ; rinch for rinse.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. muses, gossips ; 7. whimpering ; 15. quaint, device ; 17. reeking ; 19. despatched ; 20. uninterrupted ; 26. efface ; 31. housewife ; 33. welkin ; 39. impervious ; 45. musings ; 56. propitious ; 62. indulgences ; 71. elfin ; 83. buoyant.

LESSON CIV.

EXERCISES.—He sinks sorrowing to the tomb.

Man loves society.

Time flies swiftly.

The birds sing.

Capturing the Wild Horse.—W. IRVING.

1. We left the buffalo camp about eight o'clock, and had a toilsome and harassing march of two hours, over ridges of hills, covered with a ragged forest, of scrub-oaks, and broken by deep gullies.

2. About ten o'clock in the morning, we came to where this line of rugged hills swept down into a valley, through which flowed the north fork of Red River. A beautiful meadow, about half a mile wide, enameled with yellow autumnal flowers, stretched for two or three miles along the foot of the hills, bordered on the opposite side by the river, whose banks were fringed with cotton-wood trees, the bright foliage of which refreshed and delighted the eye, after being wearied by the contemplation of monotonous wastes of brown forest.

3. The meadow was finely diversified by groves and clumps of trees, so happily disposed, that they seemed as if set out by the hand of art. As we cast our eyes over this fresh and delightful valley, we beheld a troop of wild horses, quietly grazing on a green lawn, about a mile distant, to our right, while to our left, at nearly the same distance, were several buffaloes; some feeding, others reposing, and ruminating among the high, rich herbage, under the shade of a clump of cotton-wood trees. The whole had the appearance of a broad beautiful tract of pasture land, on the highly ornamented estate of some gentleman farmer, with his cattle grazing about the lawns and meadows.

4. A council of war was now held, and it was determined to profit by the present favorable opportunity, and try our hand at the grand hunting maneuver, which is called "ringing the wild horse." This requires a large party of horsemen, well mounted.

5. They extend themselves in each direction, at certain distances apart, and gradually form a ring of two or three miles in circumference, so as to surround the game. This must be done with extreme care, for the wild horse is the most readily alarmed inhabitant of the prairie, and can scent a hunter at a great distance, if to windward.

6. The ring being formed, two or three ride towards the horses, which start off in an opposite direction. Whenever they approach the bounds of the ring, however, a huntsman presents himself, and turns them from their course. In this way, they are checked, and driven back at every point, and kept galloping round and round this magic circle, until being completely tired down, it is easy for the hunters to ride up beside them, and throw the *lariat over their heads. The prime horses of the most speed, courage, and bottom, however, are apt to break through, and escape, so that, in general, it is the second rate horses that are taken.

7. Preparations were now made for a hunt of this kind. The pack horses were now taken into the woods, and firmly tied to trees, lest in a rush of wild horses, they should break away.

8. Twenty-five men were then sent under the command of a lieutenant, to steal along the edge of the valley, within the strip of wood that skirted the hills. They were to station themselves about fifty yards apart, within the edge of the woods, and not advance or show themselves until the horses dashed in that direction. Twenty-five men were sent across the valley, to steal in like manner along the river bank that bordered the opposite side, and to station themselves among the trees.

9. A third party of about the same number was to form a line, stretching across the lower part of the valley, so as to connect the two wings. Beatte and our other half breed Antoine, together with the ever officious Tonish, were to make a circuit through the woods, so as to get to the upper part of the valley, in the rear of the horses, and drive them forward, into the kind of sack that we had formed, while the two wings should join behind them, and make a complete circle.

10. The flanking parties were quietly extending themselves out of sight, on each side of the valley, and the residue were stretching themselves like the links of a chain across it, when the wild horses gave signs that they scented an enemy: snuffing the air, snorting, and looking about. At length they pranced off slowly toward the river, and disappeared behind a green bank.

* The lariat is a noose of rope, fastened to the saddle-bow.

11. Here, had the regulations of the chase been observed, they would have been quietly checked and turned back by the advance of a hunter from among the trees ; unluckily, however, we had our wildfire, Jack-o'lantern little Frenchman to deal with.

12. Instead of keeping quietly up the right side of the valley, to get above the horses, the moment he saw them move toward the river, he broke out of the covert of woods, and dashed furiously across the plain in pursuit of them. This put an end to all system. The half breeds, and a half a score of rangers, joined in the chase.

13. Away they all went over the green bank ; in a moment or two, the wild horses reappeared, and came thundering down the valley, with Frenchman, half breeds and rangers, galloping and yellowing behind them. It was in vain that the line drawn across the valley, attempted to check, and turn back the fugitives ; they were too hotly pressed by their pursuers ; in their panic they dashed through the line, and clattered down the plain.

14. The whole troop joined in the headlong chase, some of the rangers without hats or caps, their hair flying about their ears, and others with handkerchiefs tied round their heads. The buffaloes, which had been calmly ruminating among the herbage, heaved up their huge forms, gazed for a moment at the tempest that came scouring down the meadow, then turned and took to heavy rolling flight. They were soon overtaken : the promiscuous throng were pressed together by the contracting sides of the valley, and away they went, pell-mell, hurry scurry, wild buffalo, wild horse, wild huntsman, with clang and clatter, and whoop and halloo, that made the forests ring.

15. At length the buffaloes turned into a green brake, on the river bank, while the horses dashed up a narrow defile of the hills, with their pursuers close at their heels. Beatte passed several of them, having fixed his eye upon a fine Pawnee horse that had his ears slit, and saddle marks upon his back.

16. He pressed him gallantly, but lost him in the woods. Among the wild horses, was a fine black mare, which in scrambling up the defile, tripped and fell. A young ranger sprang from his horse, and seized her by the mane, and muzzle. Another ranger dismounted, and came to his assistance. The mare struggled fiercely, kicking and biting, and striking with her fore feet, but a noose was slipped over her head, and her struggles were in vain.

17. It was some time, however, before she gave over rearing and plunging, and lashing out with her feet on every side. The two rangers then led her along the valley, by two strong lariats, which enabled them to keep at a sufficient distance on each side, to be out of the reach of her hoofs, and whenever she struck out in one direction, she was jerked in the other. In this way her spirit was gradually subdued.

18. As to Tonish, who had marred the whole scheme by his precipitancy, he had been more successful than he deserved, having managed to catch a beautiful cream colored colt about seven months old, that had not strength to keep up with its companions. The mercurial little Frenchman was beside himself with exultation. It was amusing to see him with his prize. The colt would rear and kick, and struggle to get free, when Tonish would take him about the neck, wrestle with him, jump on his back, and cut as many antics as a monkey with a kitten.

19. Nothing surprised me more, however, than to witness how soon these poor animals thus taken from the unbounded freedom of the prairie, yielded to the dominion of man. In the course of two or three days, the mare and colt went with the lead horses, and became quite docile.

QUESTIONS.—1. Near what river did this expedition commence? 2. Where is that river? 3. Describe the country, scenery, etc. 4. What animated objects presented themselves to view upon the right and the left? 5. To what is the whole scene compared? 6. What hunting maneuver was commenced? describe it. 7. What is the lariat? 8. Describe the proceedings of the party in this maneuver. 9. What interrupted its successful completion? 10. Give the striking contrast between the flight of the wild horses and that of the buffaloes. 11. Describe the capture of the black mare. 12. What was the conduct of the captured animals in respect to being tamed? 13. Was not this cruel sport?

ERRORS.—nuth-in' for noth-ing; med-ers for mead-ows; hos-ses for hors-es; per-a-ra for prai-rie; Beat-te pronounced By-at.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. buffalo, harassing; 2. enameled, autumnal, contemplation, monotonous; 3. ruminating; 4. maneuver; 5. circumference, windward; 6. huntsman; 7. preparations; 10. flanking; 11. regulations, wildfire, jack-o'-lantern; 13. reappeared; 14. handkerchief; 16. scrambling; 18. mercurial, exultation; 19. unbounded, prairie.

LESSON CV.

RULE.—Be careful and give a full sound to the vowels. Regard to this rule will correct the common flat, clipping and uninteresting way in which many read.

EXERCISES in which the vowels italicised are to be prolonged.

Hail! holy light.

We praise thee, O Lord God.

These names of the Deity are seldom pronounced with that full and solemn sound that is proper. Lud and Law-ard and Gud and Gawd are too frequently used instead of the proper sounds. If the pupil can learn to speak the three words, O—Lord—God, properly, it will be worth no little attention. Every pupil ought to be exercised on these words till they pronounce them properly and in a full and solemn tone.

The Gods of the Heathen.—BIBLE.

1. Not unto us, O Lord! not unto us,
But unto thy name give glory,
For thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake.
Wherefore should the heathen say,
Where is now their God?
But our God is in the heavens:
He hath done whatsoever he hath pleased.
2. Their idols are silver and gold,
The work of men's hands.
They have mouths—but they speak not:
Eyes have they—but they see not:
They have ears—but they hear not:
Noses have they—but they smell not:
They have hands—but they handle not.
Feet have they—but they walk not:
Neither speak they through their throat.
They that make them are like unto them;
So is every one that trusteth in them.
3. O Israel! trust thou in the Lord:
He is their help and their shield.
O house of Aaron! trust in the Lord:
He is their help and their shield.
Ye that fear the Lord, trust in the Lord:
He is their help and their shield.
4. The Lord hath been mindful of us: he will bless us;
He will bless the house of Israel:
He will bless the house of Aaron.

He will bless them that fear the Lord,
Both small and great.
The Lord shall increase you more and more,
You and your children.
Ye are blessed of the Lord
Which made heaven and earth.

5. The heaven, even the heavens are the Lord's:
But the earth hath he given to the children of men.
The dead praise not the Lord,
Neither any that go down into silence.
But we will bless the Lord
From this time forth and for evermore,
Praise the Lord !

QUESTIONS.—1. What is the general sentiment intended to be inspired by this Psalm ? 2. What is the contrast made between the true God, and the idols of the heathen ?

ERRORS.—un-ter for un-to ; mear-cy for mer-cy ; ni-ther for neith-er.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. heathen, whatsoever ; 2. trusteth ; 4. increase ; 5. evermore.

LESSON CVI.

RULE.—In reading any thing solemn, a full, slow and distinct manner should be preserved, and particular attention paid to the stops.

The Fall of Babylon.—JEBB'S SACRED LIT.

1. And after these things, I saw another angel descending from heaven,
Having great power : and the earth was enlightened with his glory :
And he cried mightily with a loud voice : saying
She is fallen ! she is fallen !
5. Babylon the great !
And is become the habitation of demons
And the hold of every impure spirit ;
And the cage of every impure and hateful bird ;
For in the wine of the wrath of her lewdness hath she pledged all nations ;
10. And the kings of the earth have with her committed lewdness.
And the merchants of the earth, from the excess of her wanton luxury, have waxed rich ;
And I heard another voice from heaven, saying :
Come out of her, my people ;
That ye be not partakers of her sins,
15. And of her plagues that ye may not receive :

- For her sins have reached up unto heaven,
 And God hath remembered her iniquities :
 Repay to her as she also hath repaid,
 And double to her double, according to her works.
20. In the cup which she hath mingled, mingle to her double ;
 As much as she hath glorified herself and played the luxurious wanton,
 So much give to her torment and sorrow :
 For in her heart she saith,
 " I sit a queen
 25. And a widow am not I :
 And sorrow I shall not see ; " —
 Therefore, in one day shall come her plagues ;
 Death, and mourning, and famine,
 And with fire shall she be consumed ;
30. For strong is the Lord God, who hath passed sentence upon her.
 Then shall bewail her, and smite the breast for her,
 The kings of the earth who have committed
 Lewdness with her, and lived in wanton luxury,
 When they shall see the smoke of her burning,
35. Standing afar off, because of the fear of her torment ; saying,
 " Wo ! Wo ! the great city, Babylon the strong city !
 In one hour thy judgment is come ! " —
 And the merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn over her,
 For their merchandise no man buyeth any more :
40. Merchandise of gold and silver :
 Of precious stones and pearls ;
 And of fine linen and of purple :
 And of silk and scarlet ;
 And every odorous wood and every vessel of ivory ;
45. And every vessel of most precious wood :
 And of brass and iron and marble ;
 And cinnamon and amomum :
 And perfumes, and myrrh, and incense ;
 And wine and oil ;
50. And fine flour and wheat ;
 And cattle and sheep :
 And horses and chariots and slaves ;
 And the souls of men :
 And the autumnal fruits of thy soul's desire are gone from thee :
55. And all delicacies and splendors have vanished from thee,
 And thou shalt never find them any more !
 The merchants of these things, who were enriched by her,
 Shall stand afar off because of the fear of her torment :
 Weeping and mourning : saying,
60. " Wo ! Wo ! the great city !
 She who was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet,
 And was decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls !
 For in one hour is brought to desolation this so great wealth ! " —
 And every ship-master, and every super-cargo,
65. And mariners, and all who labor on the sea,
 Stood afar off, and cried aloud,

- When they saw the smoke of her burning ; saying :
 " What city, like the great city !"
 And they cast dust upon their heads
70. And cried aloud, weeping and mourning ; saying :
 " Wo ! Wo ! the great city !
 Wherein all who had ships upon the sea waxed rich
 By her costliness ;
 For in one hour has she been made desolate !"
75. Rejoice over her thou heaven !
 And ye saints ! and ye apostles ! and ye prophets !
 For God hath for her crimes against you passed sentence upon her !
 And a mighty angel took up a stone like a huge millstone, and cast it into the sea ; saying :
 " Thus with violence shall be thrown down Babylon the great city, and shall be found no more ;
80. And the voice of harpers, and musicians and flute players, and trumpeters shall be heard in thee no more
 And any artificer of any ingenious art shall be found in thee no more :
 And the sound of a millstone shall be heard in thee no more :
 And the light of a lamp shall be seen in thee no more :
 And the voice of the bridegroom, and of the bride, shall be heard in thee no more,
85. For thy merchants were the great ones of the earth ;
 For by thy sorceries were deceived all the nations,
 And in her the blood of prophets and saints hath been found :
 And of all those who were slain upon the earth."
 And after these things I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude in heaven, saying, " HALLELUJAH !
90. Salvation, and glory, and honor
 And power, be unto the Lord our God !
 For true and righteous are his judgments ;
 For he hath judged the great harlot
 Who corrupted the earth with her lewdness ;
95. And he hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand."
 And, a second time they said, " HALLELUJAH !"
 And her smoke ascendeth forever and ever !

QUESTIONS.—1. By whom were the Revelations written ? 2. Where ?
 3. What city is designated by the name " Babylon ?" 4. Why is this supposed ? 5. Are these prophecies yet accomplished ?

ERRORS.—per-ta-kers for par-ta-kers ; in-ik-i-ties for in-iq-ui-ties.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—6. demons ; 8. hateful ; 11. merchants ; 17.
 iniquities ; 31. bewail ; 39. merchandise ; 47. cinnamon, amomum ; 48.
 perfumes, myrrh, incense ; 63. desolation ; 89. hallelujah.

LESSON CVII.

RULE.—When similar sounds come at the end of one word, and at the beginning of the next word, they must not be blended into one.

EXERCISES.—He sinks sorrowing to the tomb.

Antony's Oration over Cæsar's Dead Body.

SHAKSPEARE.

1. Friends, Romans, countrymen! Lend me your ears.

I come to bury Cæsar, not to praise him.
The evil that men do, lives after them;
The good is oft interred with their bones:
So let it be with Cæsar! Noble Brutus
Hath told you, that Cæsar was ambitious.
If it were so, it was a grievous fault;
And grievously hath Cæsar answered it.
Here, under leave of Brutus and the rest,
(For Brutus is an honorable man;
So are they all, all honorable men,)
Come I to speak in Cæsar's funeral.

2. He was my friend, faithful and just to me:

But Brutus says, he was ambitious;
And Brutus is an honorable man.
He hath brought many captives home to Rome,
Whose ransoms did the general coffers fill:
Did this in Cæsar seem ambitious?
When that the poor have cried, Cæsar hath wept.
Ambition should be made of sterner stuff.
Yet Brutus says he was ambitious;
And Brutus is an honorable man.
You all did see, that, on the Lupercal,
I thrice presented him a kingly crown;
Which he did thrice refuse: Was this ambition?
Yet Brutus says he was ambitious;
And, sure, he is an honorable man.
I speak not to disprove what Brutus spoke;
But here I am, to speak what I do know.
You all did love him once; not without cause;—
What cause withholds you then to mourn for him?
O judgment! thou art fled to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason.—Bear with me:
My heart is in the coffin there with Cæsar;
And I must pause till it come back to me.

3. But yesterday the word, Cæsar, might
Have stood against the world ! Now lies he there,
And none so poor to do him reverence.
O Masters ! if I were disposed to stir
Your hearts and minds to mutiny and rage,
I should do Brutus wrong, and Cassius wrong,
Who, you all know, are honorable men.
I will not do them wrong—I rather choose
To wrong the dead, to wrong myself and you,
Than I will wrong such honorable men.
But here's a parchment, with the seal of Cæsar.
I found it in his closet : 'tis his will.
Let but the commons hear this testament,
(Which, pardon me, I do not mean to read,)
And they would go and kiss dead Cæsar's wounds,
And dip their napkins in his sacred blood ;
Yea, beg a hair of him for memory,
And, dying, mention it within their wills,
Bequeathing it, as a rich legacy,
Unto their issue.

4. If you have tears, prepare to shed them now.
You all do know this mantle : I remember
The first time ever Cæsar put it on ;
'Twas on a summer's evening in his tent :
That day he overcame the Nervii—
Look ! In this place ran Cassius' dagger through—
See what a rent the envious Casca made—
Through this the well-beloved Brutus stabbed ;
And, as he plucked his cursed steel away,
Mark how the blood of Cæsar followed it !
This, this was the unkindest cut of all !
For when the noble Cæsar saw him stab,
Ingratitude, more strong than traitor's arms,
Quite vanquished him ! Then burst his mighty heart,
And in his mantle muffling up his face,
Even at the base of Pompey's statue,
(Which all the while ran blood,) great Cæsar fell.
O, what a fall was there, my countrymen !
Then I, and you, and all of us, fell down,
Whilst bloody treason flourished over us.
O, now you weep ; and I perceive you feel
The dint of pity ! These are gracious drops.
Kind souls ! What, weep you when you but behold
Our Cæsar's vesture wounded ? Look ye here !
Here is himself—marred, as you see, by traitors.

5. Good friends ! Sweet friends ! Let me not stir you up
To any sudden flood of mutiny.
They that have done this deed, are honorable.
What private griefs they have, alas ! I know not,
That made them do it. They are wise and honorable,

And will, no doubt, with reason answer you.
 I come not, friends, to steal away your hearts !
 I am no orator, as Brutus is ;
 But, as you know me all, a plain, blunt man,
 That love my friend—and that they know full well,
 That gave me public leave to speak of him !
 For I have neither wit, nor words, nor worth,
 Action, nor utterance, nor power of speech,
 To stir men's blood—I only speak right on.
 I tell you that which you yourselves do know—
 Show you sweet Cæsar's wounds, poor, poor, dumb mouths,
 And bid them speak for me. But, were I Brutus,
 And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony
 Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue
 In every wound of Cæsar, that should move
 The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny.

QUESTIONS.—1. Who was Casca ? 2. Where was Pompey's statue situated ? 3. Was Antony sincere in disavowing an intention to " stir the Romans up to mutiny ?" 4. Why does he express such respect for Brutus ? 5. Relate the story of Cæsar's death.

ERRORS.—griev-yus for griev-ous (pronounced griev-us) ; cof-f'n for cof-fin.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. interred, grievously ; 2. ambitious, captives, judgment ; 3. disposed, mutiny, parchment, testament ; 4. envious, vanquished, ingratitude, gracious, vesture, marred, 5. utterance, ruffle.

LESSON CVIII.

RULE.—Pronounce the consonant sounds very distinctly

EXAMPLE.—Prolong the consonant sounds that are italicised.—b-old, d-eign, f-ather, g-ather, j-oy, l-ight, m-an, n-o, q-ueer, p-ray, v-ale, w-oe y-ours, z-one, h-ang.

Egyptian Mummies, Tombs, and Manners. BELZONI.

1. Gournou is a tract of rocks, about two miles in length, at the foot of the Libyan mountains, on the west of Thebes, and was the burial-place of the great city of a hundred gates. Every part of these rocks is cut out by art, in the form of large and of small chambers, each of which has its separate entrance ; and though they are very close to each other, it is seldom that there is any interior communication from one to another. I can truly say, it is impossible to give any description sufficient to convey the smallest idea of those subterranean abodes and their inhabitants. There are no sepulchres in any part of the world like them ; there are no excavations, or mines, that can be compared to these truly astonishing places ; and no exact description can be given of their interior, owing to the difficulty of visiting these recesses. The inconveniency of entering into them is such, that it is not every one who can support the exertion.

2. A traveler is generally satisfied when he has seen the large hall, the gallery, the staircase, and as far as he can conveniently go : besides, he is taken up with the strange works he observes cut in various places, and painted on each side of the walls ; so that when he comes to a narrow and difficult passage, or a descent to the bottom of a well or cavity, he declines taking such trouble, naturally supposing that he cannot see in these abysses any thing so magnificent as what he sees above, and consequently deeming it useless to proceed any farther.

3. Of some of these tombs many persons could not withstand the suffocating air, which often causes fainting. A vast quantity of dust rises, so fine that it enters into the throat and nostrils, and chokes the nose and mouth to such a degree, that it requires great power of lungs to resist it, and the strong effluvia of the mummies. This is not all ; the entry or passage where the bodies are, is roughly cut in the rocks, and the falling of the sand from the upper part or ceiling of the passage causes it to be nearly filled up. In some places there is not more than a vacancy of a foot left, which you must contrive to pass through in a creeping posture like a snail, on pointed and keen stones, that cut like glass.

4. After getting through these passages, some of them two or three hundred yards long, you generally find a more commodious place, perhaps high enough to sit. But what a place of rest ! surrounded by bodies, by heaps of mummies in all directions ; which, previous to my being accustomed to the sight, impressed me with horror. The blackness of the wall, the faint light given by the candles or torches for want of air, the different objects that surrounded me, seeming to converse with each other, and the Arabs with the candles or torches in their hands, naked and covered with dust, themselves resembling living mummies, absolutely formed a scene that cannot be described. In such a situation I found myself several times, and often returned exhausted and fainting, till at last I became inured to it, and indifferent to what I suffered, except from the dust, which never failed to choke my throat and nose ; and though, fortunately, I am destitute of the sense of smelling, I could taste that the mummies were rather unpleasant to swallow.

5. After the exertion of entering into such a place, through a passage of fifty, a hundred, three hundred, or perhaps six hundred yards, nearly overcome, I sought a resting-place, found one, and contrived to sit ; but when my weight bore on the body of an Egyptian, it crushed like a band-box. I naturally had recourse to my hands to sustain my weight, but they found no better support ; so that I sank altogether among the broken mummies, with a crash of bones, rags, and wooden cases, which raised such a dust as kept me motionless for a quarter of an hour, waiting till it subsided again. I could not remove from the place, however, without increasing it, and every step I took I crushed a mummy in some part or other.

6. Once I was conducted from such a place to another resembling it, through a passage of about twenty feet in length, and no wider than what a body could be forced through. It was choked with mummies, and I could not pass without putting my face in contact with that of some decayed Egyptian ; but as the passage inclined downwards, my own weight helped me on ; however, I could not avoid being covered with bones, legs, arms, and heads, rolling from above. Thus I proceeded from one cave to another, all full of mummies piled up in various ways, some standing, some lying, and some on their heads.

7. The purpose of my researches was to rob the Egyptians of their papyri ; of which I found a few hidden in their breasts under their arms, in the space above the knees, or on the legs, and covered by the numerous folds of cloth that envelop the mummy. The people of Gournou, who make a trade of antiquities of this sort, are very jealous of strangers, and keep them as secret as possible ; deceiving travelers, by pretending that they have arrived at the end of the pits, when they are scarcely at the entrance. * * *

8. I must not omit, that among these tombs we saw some which contained the mummies of animals intermixed with human bodies. There were bulls, cows, sheep, monkeys, foxes, bats, crocodiles, fishes, and birds in them : idols often occur ; and one tomb was filled with nothing but cats, carefully folded in red and white linen, the head covered by a mask representing the cat, and made of the same linen. I have opened all these sorts of animals. Of the bull, the calf, and the sheep, there is no part but the head which is covered with linen, and the horns project out of the cloth; the rest of the body being represented by two pieces of wood, eighteen inches wide, and three feet long, in a horizontal direction, at the end of which was another, placed perpendicularly, two feet high, to form the breast of the animal.

9. The calves and sheep are of the same structure, and large in proportion to the bulls. The monkey is in its full form, in a sitting posture. The fox is squeezed up by the bandages, but in some measure the shape of the head is kept perfect. The crocodile is left in its own shape, and after being well bound round with linen, the eyes and mouth are painted on this covering. The birds are squeezed together, and lose their shape, except the ibis, which is found like a fowl ready to be cooked, and bound round with linen like all the rest. * * *

10. The next sort of mummy that drew my attention, I believe I may with reason conclude to have been appropriated to the priests. They are folded in a manner totally different from the others, and so carefully executed, as to show the great respect paid to those personages. The bandages are stripes of red and white linen intermixed, covering the whole body, and producing a curious effect from the two colors. The arms and legs are not enclosed in the same envelope with the body, as in the common mode, but are bandaged separately, even the fingers and toes being preserved distinct. They have sandals of painted leather on their feet, and bracelets on their arms and wrists. They are always found with the arms across the breast, but not pressing it; and though the body is bound with such a quantity of linen, the shape of the person is carefully preserved in every limb. The cases in which mummies of this sort are found, are somewhat better executed, and I have seen one that had the eyes and eyebrows of enamel, beautifully executed in imitation of nature. * * *

11. The dwelling-place of the natives is generally in the passages, between the first and second entrance into a tomb. The walls and the roof are as black as any chimney. The inner door is closed up with mud, except a small aperture sufficient for a man to crawl through. Within this place the sheep are kept at night, and occasionally accompany their masters in their vocal concert. Over the door-way there are always some half-broken Egyptian figures, and the two foxes, the usual guardians of burial-places. A small lamp.

kept alive by fat from the sheep, or rancid oil, is placed in a niche in the wall, and a mat is spread on the ground ; and this formed the grand divan wherever I was.

12. There the people assembled round me, their conversation turning wholly on antiquities. Such a one had found such a thing, and another had discovered a tomb. Various articles were brought to sell to me, and sometimes I had reason to rejoice at having stayed there. I was sure of a supper of milk and bread served in a wooden bowl ; but whenever they supposed I should stay all night, they always killed a couple of fowls for me, which were baked in a small oven heated with pieces of mummy cases, and sometimes with the bones and rags of the mummies themselves. It is no uncommon thing to sit down near fragments of bones : hands, feet, or skulls, are often in the way ; for these people are so accustomed to be among the mummies, that they think no more of sitting on them than on the skins of their dead calves. I also became indifferent about them at last, and would have slept in a mummy pit as readily as out of it.

13. Here they appear to be contented. The laborer comes home in the evening, seats himself near his cave, smokes his pipe with his companions, and talks of the last inundation of the Nile, its products, and what the ensuing season is likely to be. His old wife brings him the usual bowl of lentils and bread moistened with water and salt, and (when she can add a little butter) it is a feast. Knowing nothing beyond this, he is happy. The young man's chief business is to accumulate the amazing sum of a hundred piastres (eleven dollars and ten cents,) to buy himself a wife, and to make a feast on the wedding-day.

14. If he have any children, they want no clothing : he leaves them to themselves till mother Nature pleases to teach them to work, to gain money enough to buy a shirt or some other rag to cover themselves ; for while they are children they are generally naked or covered with rags. The parents are roguishly cunning, and the children are schooled by their example, so that it becomes a matter of course to cheat strangers. Would any one believe that, in such a state of life, luxury and ambition exist ? If any woman be destitute of jewels, she is poor, and looks with envy on one more fortunate than herself, who perhaps has the worth of half a crown round her neck ; and she who has a few glass beads, or some sort of coarse coral, a couple of silver brooches, or rings on her arms and legs, is considered as truly rich and great. Some of them are as complete coquettes, in their way, as any to be seen in the capitals of Europe.

15. When a young man wants to marry, he goes to the father of the intended bride, and agrees with him what he is to pay for her. This being settled, so much money is to be spent on the wedding-day feast. To set up housekeeping, nothing is requisite but two or three earthen pots, a stone to grind meal, and a mat which is the bed. The spouse has a gown and jewels of her own; and if the bridegroom present her with a pair of bracelets of silver, ivory, or glass, she is happy and fortunate indeed.

16. The house is ready, without rent or taxes. No rain can pass through the roof; and there is no door, for there is no want of one, as there is nothing to lose. They make a kind of box of clay and straw, which, after two or three days' exposure to the sun, becomes quite hard. It is fixed on a stand, an aperture is left to put all their precious things into it, and a piece of mummy case forms the door. If the house does not please them, they walk out and enter another, as there are several hundreds at their command; I might say several thousands, but they are not all fit to receive inhabitants.

QUESTIONS.—1. Where are the Lybian mountains? 2. Do you know any thing of the history of Thebes? 3. Why do so few travelers succeed in penetrating to the bottom of the tombs? 4. Mention some of the sources of annoyance in exploring them. 5. What was the result when Belzoni attempted to rest upon a mummy? 6. Are there any animals found embalmed? 7. What was Belzoni's object in exploring these tombs? 8. Why did he value the bits of Papyrus? 9. Describe the furniture of the dwelling places of the natives.

ERRORS.—Bel-ro-ni to be pronounced Belt-zo-nee; swal-ler for swal-low; set for sit; pos-ter for pos-ture; per-pen-dic-'lar-ly for per-pen-dic-u-lar-ly; brass-let for brace-let; pa-pur-us for pa-py-rus.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. Lybian, subterranean, inconveniency, sepulchers; 2. cavity, abysses, magnificent; 3. suffocating, effluvia; 4. commodious, torches, exhausted; 6. contact; 7. papyri, antiquities; 8. horizontal, perpendicularly; 10. appropriated, intermixed.

LESSON CIX.

RULE.—Be careful to speak little words, such as a, in, at, on, to, by, etc., very distinctly, and yet not to dwell on them so long as on the more important words.

Address to the Mummy in Belzoni's Exhibition, London.—NEW MONTHLY MAG.

1. And thou hast walk'd about (how strange a story!)
 In Thebes' streets three thousand years ago,
 When the Memnonium was in all its glory,
 And time had not begun to overthrow
 Those temples, palaces, and piles stupendous,
 Of which the very ruins are tremendous.
2. Speak! for thou long enough hast acted Dummy,
 Thou hast a tongue—come, let us hear its tune;
 Thou'rt standing on thy legs, above ground, Mummy!
 Revisiting the glimpses of the moon,
 Not like thin ghosts or disembodied creatures,
 But with thy bones and flesh, and limbs and features.
3. Tell us—for doubtless thou canst recollect,
 To whom should we assign the sphinx's fame?
 Was Cheops or Cephrenes architect
 Of either Pyramid that bears his name?
 Is Pompey's pillar really a misnomer?
 Had Thebes a hundred gates as sung by Homer?
4. Perhaps thou wert a Mason, and forbidden
 By oath to tell the mysteries of thy trade,
 Then say what secret melody was hidden
 In Memnon's statue that at sunrise played?
 Perhaps thou wert a Priest—if so, my struggles
 Are vain;—Egyptian priests ne'er owned their juggles
5. Perchance that very hand, now pinioned flat,
 Has hobb-a-nobb'd with Pharoah glass to glass;
 Or dropped a halfpenny in Homer's hat,
 Or doffed thine own to let Queen Dido pass,
 Or held, by Solomon's own invitation,
 A torch at the great Temple's dedication.
6. I need not ask thee if that hand, when armed,
 Has any Roman soldier mauled and knuckled,
 For thou wert dead, and buried, and embalmed,
 Ere Romulus and Remus had been suckled:—
 Antiquity appears to have begun
 Long after thy primeval race was run.

7. Since first thy form was in this box extended,
We have, above ground, seen some strange mutations ;
The Roman empire has begun and ended ;
New worlds have risen—we have lost old nations,
And countless kings have into dust been humbled,
While not a fragment of thy flesh has crumbled.
8. Didst thou not hear the pother o'er thy head,
When the great Persian conqueror, Cambyses,
March'd armies o'er thy tomb with thundering tread,
O'erthrew Osiris, Orus, Apis, Isis,
And shook the Pyramids with fear and wonder,
When the gigantic Memnon fell asunder ?
9. If the tomb's secrets may not be confessed,
The nature of thy private life unfold :—
A heart has throbbed beneath that leathern breast,
And tears adown that dusky cheek have rolled :—
Have children climb'd those knees, and kissed that face ?
What was thy name and station, age and race ?
10. Statue of flesh—immortal of the dead !
Imperishable type of evanescence !
Posthumous man, who quitted thy narrow bed,
And standest undecayed within our presence,
Thou wilt hear nothing till the Judgment morning
When the great trump shall thrill thee with its warning.
11. Why should this worthless tegument endure,
If its undying guest be lost for ever ?
O let us keep the soul embalmed and pure
In living virtue ; that when both must sever,
Although corruption may our frame consume,
Th' immortal spirit in the skies may bloom.

QUESTIONS.—1. What was the Memnonium ? 2. Relate the fable of Memnon's statue. 3. Who were Romulus and Remus ? 4. Osiris ? 5. Apis ? 6. Isis ? 7. What moral lesson is deduced ?

ERRORS.—ar-che-tect for ar-chi-tect (pronounced ar-ke-tect) ; The-bes for Thebes ; spir-ut for spir-it.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. Memnonium, stupendous ; 2. revisiting ; 3. pyramid, misnomer ; 4. mysteries, juggles ; 5. pinioned ; 6. mauled, primeval ; 7. mutations ; 10. evanescence, posthumous ; 11. tegument.

LESSON CX.

RULE.—When two or more consonants come together, let the pupil be careful to sound every one distinctly.

EXERCISES UNDER THE RULE.

He clenched his fists.

He lifts his awful form.

He makes his payments.

Thou smoothed'st his rugged path.

On the Value of Studies.—LORD BACON.

1. Studies serve for delight, for ornament, and for ability. Their chief use for delight, is in retired privacy ; for ornament, in discourse ; and for ability, in the arrangement and disposition of business : for expert men can execute, and, perhaps, judge of particulars, one by one ; but general councils, and the plots and marshaling of affairs, come best from the learned. To spend too much time in studies, is sloth ; to use them too much for ornament, is affectation ; to form one's judgment wholly by their rules, is the humor of a scholar. They perfect nature, and are perfected by experience : for natural abilities are like natural plants, and need pruning by study ; and studies themselves give forth directions too much at large, unless they are hedged in by experience.

2. Crafty men condemn studies ; simple men admire, and wise men use, them ; for they teach not their own use, but that is a wisdom without them and above them, won by observation. Read not to contradict and confute ; nor to believe or take for granted ; nor to find matter merely for conversation ; but to weigh and consider. Some books are to be tasted ; others, to be swallowed ; and some few, to be chewed and digested ; that is, some books are to be only glanced at ; others are to be read, but not critically ; and some few are to be read wholly, and with diligence and attention. Some books, also, may be read by deputy, and extracts received from them which are made by others ; but they should be only the meaner sort of books, and the less important arguments of those which are better : otherwise, distilled books are, like common, distilled waters, flashy things.

3. Reading makes a full man ; conversation, a ready man : and writing, an exact man. Therefore, if a man write little, he needs a great memory ; if he converse little, he wants a present wit ; and, if he read little, he ought to have much cunning, that he may seem to know what he does not. History makes men wise ; poetry makes them witty ; mathematics, subtle ; natural philosophy, deep ; moral philosophy, grave ; logic and rhetoric, able to contend : nay, there is no obstruction to the human faculties but what may be overcome by proper studies. Obstacles to learning, like the diseases of the body, are removed by appropriate exercises.

4. Thus, bowling is good for a weakness in the back ; gunning, for the lungs and breast ; walking, for the stomach ; riding for the head, and the like ; so, if one's thoughts are wandering, let him study mathematics ; for, in demonstrating, if his attention be called away ever so little, he must begin again ; if his faculties be not disciplined to distinguish and discriminate, let him study the schoolmen ; for they are (cymini sectores) the cutters of cummin ; if he is not accustomed to con over matters, and call up one fact with which to prove and illustrate another, let him study the lawyers' cases. Hence, every defect of the mind may have its special receipt.

5. There are three chief vanities in studies, by which learning has been most traduced ; for we deem those things vain which are either false or frivolous—which have no truth, or are of no use ; and those persons are considered vain, who are either credulous or curious. Judging, then, either from reason or experience, there prove to be three distempers of learning : the first is fantastical learning, the second, contentious learning, and the last, affected learning—vain imaginations, vain altercations, and vain affections.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is said of the influence of study upon the natural abilities ? 2. For what purpose should we read ? 3. Are all books to be read in the same manner ? 4. What is said of abridgments ? 5. What influence has the reading of history upon the mind ? 6. Poetry ? 7. Mathematics ? 8. Logic and rhetoric ? 9. Who are “the schoolmen ?”

ERRORS.—per-tic-lars for par-tic-u-lars ; nat-ter-al for nat-u-ral ; ar-gy-ment for ar-gu-ment ; po-'try for po-e-try ; dem-on-stra-ting for de-mon-'stra-ting.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. ornament, ability, arrangement, councils, affectation ; 2. condemn, conversation ; 4. mathematics, demonstrating ; 5. frivolous, imaginations.

LESSON CXI.

RULE.—Be careful to pronounce every syllable distinctly.

DR. DRAKE.

1. But let us leave the history and resume the physical and political geography of the West, for the purpose of considering the relations of its different regions—not to the Atlantic States, but to each other. In reviewing their boundaries and connections, we find much to excite reflection and inspire us with deep emotion. The geography of the interior, in truth, admonishes us to live in harmony, cherish uniform plans of education, and found similar institutions. The relations between the upper and lower Mississippi States, established by the collective waters of the whole Valley, must forever continue unchanged. What the towering oak is to our climbing winter grape, the “Father of Waters” must ever be to the communities along its trunk and countless tributary streams—an imperishable support, an exhaustless power of union. What is the composition of its lower coasts and alluvial plains, but the soil of all the upper states and territories, transported, mingled, and deposited by its waters?

2. Within her own limits, Louisiana has indeed, the rich mould of ten sister states, which have thus contributed to the fertility of her plantations. It might almost be said, that for ages this region has sent thither a portion of its soil, where, in a milder climate, it might produce the cotton, oranges and sugar, which, through the same channel, we receive in exchange for the products of our corn fields, work shops, and mines.—Facts which prepare the way, and invite to perpetual union between the West and South.

3. The state of Tennessee, separated from Alabama and Mississippi on the south, and Kentucky on the north, by no natural barrier, has its southern fields overspread with floating cotton, wafted from the two first by every autumnal breeze; while the shade of its northern woods, lies for half the summer day on the borders of the last. The songs and uproar of a Kentucky husking are answered from Tennessee; and the midnight racoon-hunt that follows, beginning in one state, is concluded in the other.

4. The Cumberland, on whose rocky banks the capital of Tennessee rises in beauty, begins and terminates in Kentucky—thus bearing on its bosom at the same moment, the products of the two states descending to a common market. Still further, the fine river Tennessee drains the eastern half of that state, dips into Alabama, recrosses the state in which it arose, and traverses Kentucky to reach the Ohio river; thus uniting the three into one natural and enduring commercial compact.

5. Further north, the cotton trees which fringe the borders of Missouri and Illinois, throw their images toward each other in the waters of the Mississippi—the toiling emigrant's axe, in the depths of the leafless woods, and the crash of the falling rail-tree on the frozen earth, resound equally among the hills of both states—the clouds of smoke from their burning prairies, mingle in the air above, and crimson the setting sun of Kentucky, Indiana and Ohio.

6. The Pecan tree sheds its fruit at the same moment among the people of Indiana and Illinois, and the boys of the two states paddle their canoes and fish together in the Wabash, or hail each other from opposite banks. Even villages belong equally to Indiana and Ohio, and the children of the two commonwealths trundle their hoops together in the same street.

7. But the Ohio river forms the most interesting boundary among the republics of the West. For a thousand miles its fertile bottoms are cultivated by farmers, who belong to the different states, while they visit each other as friends or neighbors. As the school boy trips or loiters along its shores, he greets his playmates across the stream, or they sport away an idle hour in its summer waters. These are to be among the future, perhaps the opposing statesmen of the different commonwealths.

8. When, at low water, we examine the rocks of the channel, we find them the same on both sides. The plants which grow above, drop their seeds into the common current, which lodges them indiscriminately on either shore. Thus the very trees and flowers emigrate from one republic to another. When the bee-tree sends out its swarms, they as often seek a habitation beyond the stream, as in their woods.

9. Throughout its whole extent, the hills of Western Virginia and Kentucky, cast their morning shadows on the plains of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri. The thunder cloud pours down its showers on different commonwealths: and the rainbow resting its extremities on two sister states, presents a beautiful arch, on which the spirits of peace may pass and re-pass in harmony and love.

10. Thus connected by nature in the great valley, we must live in the bonds of companionship, or imbrue our hands in each other's blood. We have no middle destiny. To secure the former to our posterity, we should begin while society is still tender and pliable. The saplings of the woods, if intertwined, will adapt themselves to each other and grow together; the little bird may hang its nest on the twigs of different trees, and the dew-drops fall successively on leaves which are nourished by distinct trunks. The tornado strikes harmless on such a bower, for the various parts sustain each other, but the grown tree, sturdy and set in its way, will not bend to its fellow; and when uprooted by the tempest, is dashed with violence against all within its reach.

11. Communities, like forests, grow rigid by time. To be properly trained they must be moulded while young. Our duty, then, is quite obvious. All who have moral power, should exert it in concert. The germs of harmony must be nourished, and the roots of present contrariety or future discord, torn up and cast into the fire. Measures should be taken to mould an uniform system of manners and customs, out of the diversified elements which are scattered over the West.

12. Literary meetings should be held in the different states; and occasional conventions in the central cities of the great valley, be made to bring into friendly consultation, our enlightened and zealous teachers, professors, lawyers, physicians, divines, and men of letters, from its remotest sections. In their deliberations, the literary and moral wants of the various regions might be made known, and the means of supplying them devised.

13. The whole should successively lend a helping hand to all the parts, on the great subject of education, from the primary school to the University. Statistical facts, bearing on this absorbing interest, should be brought forward and collected; the systems of common school instruction should be compared, and the merits of different school books, foreign and domestic, freely canvassed.

14. Plans of education, adapted to the natural, commercial, and social condition of the interior, should be invented; a correspondence instituted, among all our higher seminaries of learning, and an interchange established of all local publications on the subject of education. In short, we should foster western genius, encourage western writers, patronize western publishers, augment the number of western readers, and create a western heart.

15. When these great objects shall come seriously to occupy our minds, the union will be secure ; for its center will be sound, and its attraction on the surrounding parts irresistible. Then will our state governments emulate each other in works for the common good ; the people of remote places begin to feel as the members of one family ; and our whole intelligent and virtuous population unite, heart and hand, in one long, concentrated, untiring effort, to raise still higher the social character, and perpetuate forever, the political harmony of the green and growing West.

QUESTIONS.—1. What river establishes a commercial and social connexion between Missouri and Louisiana ? 2. What states are bound together by the Tennessee river ? 3. What states does the Ohio river bind together ? 4. In what manner will harmony among the western states perpetuate the Union ?

ERRORS.—ruz-zume for re-sume ; trib-er-ta-ry for trib-u-ta-ry ; trav-us-ses for trav-ers-es ; ex-treme-i-ties for ex-trem-i-ties ; ub-sorb for ab-sorb.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. physical, connections ; 3. barrier ; 4. terminates ; 5. emigrants ; 7. cultivated, commonwealth ; 8. habitation ; 11. diversified ; 14. commercial, correspondence ; 15. concentrated.

LESSON CXII.

RULE.—Let the pupil stand at as great a distance from the teacher as possible, and then try to read so loud and distinctly that the teacher may hear each syllable.

The Venomous Worm.—JOHN RUSSELL.

—“ Outvenoms all the worms of Nile.”—Shakspeare.

1. Who has not heard of the rattle-snake or copperhead ? An unexpected sight of either of these reptiles will make even the lords of creation recoil ; but there is a species of worm, found in various parts of this state, which conveys a poison of a nature so deadly, that, compared with it, even the venom of the rattle-snake is harmless. To guard our readers against this foe of human kind, is the object of this lesson.

2. This worm varies much in size. It is frequently an inch in diameter, but, as it is rarely seen, except when coiled, its length can hardly be conjectured. It is of a dull lead color, and generally lives near a spring or small stream of water, and bites the unfortunate people, who are in the habit of going there to drink. The brute creation it never molests. They avoid it with the same instinct that teaches the animals of Peru to shun the deadly coya.

3. Several of these reptiles have long infested our settlements, to the misery and destruction of many of our fellow citizens. I have, therefore, had frequent opportunities of being the melancholy spectator of the effects produced by the subtle poison which this worm infuses.

4. The symptoms of its bite are terrible. The eyes of the patient become red and fiery, his tongue swells to an immoderate size, and obstructs his utterance; and delirium, of the most horrid character, quickly follows. Sometimes, in his madness, he attempts the destruction of his nearest friends.

5. If the sufferer has a family, his weeping wife and helpless infants are not unfrequently the objects of his frantic fury. In a word, he exhibits, to the life, all the detestable passions that rankle in the bosom of a savage; and, such is the spell in which his senses are locked, that, no sooner has the unhappy patient recovered from the paroxysm of insanity, occasioned by the bite, than he seeks out the destroyer, for the sole purpose of being bitten again.

6. I have seen a good old father, his locks as white as snow, his steps slow and trembling, beg in vain of his only son to quit the lurking place of the worm. My heart bled when he turned away; for I knew the fond hope, that his son would be the "staff of his declining years," had supported him through many a sorrow.

7. Youths of America, would you know the name of this reptile? It is called the Worm of the Still.

EXERCISES.—1. Why is intemperance worse than the bite of the most venomous serpent? 2. What is the coya?

ERRORS.—re-kile for re-coil; 'genst for a-gainst; sub-tle pronounced sut-tle.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. copperhead, reptiles, recoil, venom; 2. unfortunate, molest; 3. infested, infuses; 5. rankle; 6. declining.

LESSON CXIII.

RULE.—In reading poetry, be careful not to join the final consonant of one word to the vowel of the next word.

EXAMPLE.—Loud as his thunder shout his praise
And sound it lofty as his throne.

The following way of reading it, shows the fault to be remedied, by observing the rule.

Loud as his thunder shout his praise
And soun dit lofty as his throne.

The Better Land.—MRS. HEMANS.

1. "I hear thee speak of the better land;
Thou call'st its children a happy band;
Mother! oh, where is that radiant shore?
Shall we not seek it, and weep no more?
Is it where the flower of the orange blows,
And the fire-flies dance through the myrtle boughs?"
—"Not there, not there, my child!"
2. "Is it where the feathery palm-trees rise,
And the date grows ripe under sunny skies?
Or midst the green islands of glittering seas,
Where fragrant forests perfume the breeze,
And strange bright birds, on their starry wings,
Bear the rich hues of all glorious things?"
—"Not there, not there, my child!"
3. "Is it far away, in some region old,
Where the rivers wander o'er sands of gold,
Where the burning rays of the ruby shine,
And the diamond lights up the secret mine,
And the pearl gleams forth from the coral strand?
Is it there, sweet mother! that better land?"
—"Not there, not there, my child!"
4. "Eye hath not seen it, my gentle boy!
Ear hath not heard its deep sounds of joy;
Dreams cannot picture a world so fair;
Sorrow and death may not enter there;
Time doth not breathe on its fadeless bloom,
Beyond the clouds, and beyond the tomb;
—It is there, it is there, my child!"

QUESTIONS.—What climate produces the myrtle, palm, and date?

2. Why is the palm tree called feathery?

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. radiant; 2. glittering, fragrant; 3. gleams, diamond, coral, region.

LESSON CXIV.

RULE.—When similar sounds come at the end of one word, and at the beginning of the next word, they must not be blended into one.

EXERCISES.—He sinks sorrowing to the tomb.

Man loves society.

Time flies swiftly.

The birds sing.

Benefits of Literature.—LORD LYTTLETON.

1. Hercules. Do you pretend to sit as high on Olympus as Hercules? Did you kill the Nemæan lion, the Erymanthian boar, the Lernean serpent, and Stympthalian birds? Did you destroy tyrants and robbers? You value yourself greatly on subduing one serpent: I did as much as that while I lay in my cradle.

2. Cadmus. It is not on account of the serpent, that I boast myself a greater benefactor to Greece than you. Actions should be valued by their utility, rather than their splendor. I taught Greece the art of writing, to which laws owe their precision and permanency. You subdued monsters; I civilized men. It is from untamed passions, not from wild beasts, that the greatest evils arise to human society. By wisdom, by art, by the united strength of a civil community, men have been enabled to subdue the whole race of lions, bears, and serpents; and, what is more, to bind by laws and wholesome regulation, the ferocious violence and dangerous treachery of the human disposition. Had lions been destroyed only in single combat, men had had but a bad time of it; and what, but laws, could awe the men who killed the lions? The genuine glory, the proper distinction of the rational species, arises from the perfection of the mental powers. Courage is apt to be fierce, and strength is often exerted in acts of oppression: but wisdom is the associate of justice. It assists her to form equal laws, to pursue right measures, to correct power, protect weakness, and to unite individuals in a common interest and general welfare. Heroes may kill tyrants, but it is wisdom and laws that prevent tyranny and oppression. The operations of policy far surpass the labors of Hercules, preventing many evils which valor and might cannot even redress. You heroes regard nothing but glory; and scarcely consider whether the conquests, which raise your fame, are really beneficial to your country. Unhappy are the people who are governed by valor not directed by prudence, and not mitigated by the gentle arts !

3. Hercules. I do not expect to find an admirer of my strenuous life, in the man who taught his countrymen to sit still and read ; and to lose the hours of youth and action in idle speculation and the sport of words.

4. Cadmus. An ambition to have a place in the registers of fame, is the Eurystheus which imposes heroic labors on mankind. The Muses incite to action, as well as entertain the hours of repose ; and I think you should honor them for presenting to heroes so noble a recreation, as may prevent their taking up the distaff when they lay down the club.

5. Hercules. Wits as well as heroes can take up the distaff. What think you of their thin-spun systems of philosophy, or lascivious poems, or Milesian fables ? Nay, what is still worse, are there not panegyrics on tyrants, and books that blaspheme the gods, and perplex the natural sense of right and wrong ? I believe if Eurystheus were to set me to work again, he would find me a worse task than any he imposed ; he would make me read over a great library ; and I would serve it as I did the Hydra, I would burn it as I went on, that one chimera might not rise from another, to plague mankind. I should have valued myself more on clearing the library, than on cleansing the Augean stables.

6. Cadmus. It is in those libraries only that the memory of your labor exists. The heroes of Marathon, the patriots of Thermopylæ, owe their fame to me. All the wise institutions of lawgivers, and all the doctrines of sages, had perished in the ear, like a dream related, if letters had not preserved them. O Hercules ! it is not for the man who preferred Virtue to Pleasure, to be an enemy to the Muses. Let Sardanapalus and the silken sons of luxury, who have wasted life in inglorious ease, despise the records of action, which bear no honorable testimony to their lives : but true merit, heroic virtue, should respect the sacred source of lasting honor.

7. Hercules. Indeed, if writers employed themselves only in recording the acts of great men, much might be said in their favor. But why do they trouble people with their meditations ? Can it be of any consequence to the world what an idle man has been thinking ?

8. Cadmus. Yes it may. The most important and extensive advantages mankind enjoy, are greatly owing to men who have never quitted their closets. To them mankind are obliged for the facility and security of navigation. The invention of the compass has opened to them new worlds. The knowledge of the mechanical powers has enabled them to construct such wonderful machines, as perform what the united labor of millions, by the severest drudgery, could not accomplish. Agriculture too, the most useful of arts, has received its share of improvement from the same source. Poetry, likewise, is of excellent use, to enable the memory to retain with more ease, and to imprint with more energy upon the heart, precepts and examples of virtue. From the little root of a few letters, science has spread its branches over all nature, and raised its head to the heavens. Some philosophers have entered so far into the counsels of Divine Wisdom, as to explain much of the great operations of nature. The dimensions and distances of the planets, the causes of their revolutions, the path of comets, and the ebbing and flowing of tides, are understood and explained. 1

9. Can any thing raise the glory of the human species more, than to see a little creature, inhabiting a small spot, amidst innumerable worlds, taking a survey of the universe, comprehending its arrangement, and entering into the scheme of that wonderful connexion and correspondence of things so remote, and which it seems a great exertion of Omnipotence to have established? What a volume of wisdom, what a noble theology, do these discoveries open to us? While some superior geniuses have soared to these sublime subjects, other sagacious and diligent minds have been inquiring into the most minute works of the Infinite Artificer: the same care, the same providence, is exerted through the whole; and we should learn from it, that, to true wisdom, utility and fitness appear perfection, and whatever is beneficial is noble.

10. Hercules. I approve of science as far as it is an assistant to action. I like the improvement of navigation, and the discovery of the greater part of the globe, because it opens a wider field for the master spirits of the world to bustle in.

11. Cadmus. There spoke the soul of Hercules. But if learned men are to be esteemed for the assistance they give to active minds in their schemes, they are not less to be valued for their endeavors to give them a right direction, and moderate their too great ardor. The study of history will teach the legislature by what means states have become powerful; and in the private citizen, they will inculcate the love of liberty and order. The writings of sages point out a private path of virtue: and show that the best empire is self-government, and that subduing our passions is the noblest of conquests.

12. Hercules. The true spirit of patriotism acts by a generous impulse, and wants neither the experience of history, nor the doctrines of philosophers to direct it. But do not arts and science render men effeminate, luxurious, and inactive? and can you deny that wit and learning are often made subservient to very bad purposes?

13. Cadmus. I will own that there are some natures so happily formed, they scarcely want the assistance of a master, and the rules of art, to give them force or grace in every thing they do. But these favored geniuses are few. As learning flourishes only where ease, plenty, and mild government subsists; in so rich a soil, and under so soft a climate, the weeds of luxury will spring up among the flowers of art: but the spontaneous weeds would grow more rank, if they were allowed the undisturbed possession of the field. Letters keep a frugal, temperate nation from growing ferocious, a rich one from becoming entirely sensual and debauched. Every gift of heaven is sometimes abused; but good sense and fine talents, by a natural law, gravitate towards virtue. Accidents may drive them out of their proper direction; but such accidents are an alarming omen, and of dire portent to the times. For if virtue cannot keep to her allegiance those men, who in their hearts confess her divine right, and know the value of her laws, on whose fidelity and obedience can she depend? May such geniuses never descend to flatter vice, encourage folly, or propagate irreligion; but exert all their powers in the service of Virtue, and celebrate the noble choice of those, who, like Hercules, preferred her to Pleasure!

QUESTIONS.—1. Who was Hercules? 2. Can you enumerate some of the principal exploits of Hercules? 3. What is the difference between the character of the exploits of Hercules, and those of Cadmus? 4. Who was Cadmus? 5. What did Cadmus do? 6. How should actions be valued? 7. From what must the genuine glory of rational beings arise? 8. To which of his labors does Hercules compare the reading of a modern library? [the cleansing of it?] 9. Since so much trash and folly is written, what is the use of writers? 10. What does Hercules think of science? 11. What is patriotism?

ERRORS.—pur-tend for pre-tend; Her-cules for Her-cu-les.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. Olympus, Stymphalian; 2. wholesome, tyranny; 3. strenuous; 4. Eurystheus; 5. panegyrics, Augean; 6. Marathon; 8. philosophers, omnipotence, infinite; 13. ferocious.

LESSON CXV.

RULE.—In reading poetry that does not rhyme, there should be no pause at the end of a line, except when it terminates with an important word, or the sense requires it.

Thalaba among the Ruins of Babylon.

SOUTHEY.

1. The many-colored domes*
 Yet wore one dusky hue;
 The cranes upon the mosque
 Kept their night clatter still;
 When through the gate the early traveler pass'd.
 And when, at evening, o'er the swampy plain
 The bittern's boom came far,
 Distinct in darkness seen,
 Above the low horizon's lingering light,
 Rose the near ruins of old Babylon.

2. Once, from her lofty walls the charioteer Look'd down on swarming myriads; once she flung
 Her arches o'er Euphrates' conquered tide,
 And, through her brazen portals when she poured
 Her armies forth, the distant nations looked
 As men who watch the thunder-cloud in fear,
 Lest it should burst above them.—She was fallen!
 The queen of cities, Babylon was fallen!
 Low lay her bulwarks; the black scorpion basked
 In palace courts: within the sanctuary
 The she-wolf hid her whelps.

3. Is yonder huge and shapeless heap, what once
 Hath been the aerial gardens, height on height
 Rising, like Media's mountains, crowned with wood,
 Work of imperial dotage? Where the fane
 Of Belus? Where the golden image now,
 Which, at the sound of dulcimer and lute,
 Cornet and sackbut, harp and psaltery,
 The Assyrian slaves adored?
 A labyrinth of ruins, Babylon
 Spreads o'er the blasted plain.
 The wandering Arab never sets his tent
 Within her walls. The shepherd eyes afar
 Her evil towers, and devious drives his flock.
 Alone unchanged, a free and bridgeless tide,
 Euphrates rolls along,
 Eternal nature's work.

4. Through the broken portal,
 Over weedy fragments,
 Thalaba went his way.
 Cautious he trod, and felt
The dangerous ground before him with his bow.
 The jackal started at his steps;
 The stork, alarmed at sound of man,
From her broad nest upon the old pillar top,
 Affrighted fled on flapping wings:
 The adder, in her haunts disturbed,
Lanced at the intruding staff her arrowy tongue.

5. Twilight and moonshine, dimly mingling, gave
 An awful light obscure:
 Evening not wholly closed—
 The moon still pale and faint,—
 An awful light obscure,
Broken by many a mass of blackest shade;
Long columns stretching dark through weeds and moss;
 Broad length of lofty wall,
 Whose windows lay in light,
And of their former shape, low-arched or square,
 Rude outline on the earth
 Figured with long grass fringed.

6. Reclined against a column's broken shaft,
Unknowing whitherward to bend his way,
 He stood and gazed around.
 The ruins closed him in:
 It seemed as if no foot of man
 For ages had intruded there.
 He stood and gazed awhile,
Musing on Babel's pride, and Babel's fall;
 Then, through the ruined street,
 And through the farther gate,
 He passed in silence on.

QUESTIONS.—1. Where was Babylon situated, and of what the capital? 2. How could a charioteer look down from the walls? 3. Describe the "aerial gardens." 4. What were the dimensions of the temple of Belus? 5. Do you know any thing relative to the golden image mentioned in this lesson? 6. From what book do you learn this story?

ERRORS.—eve-nin' for e-ven-ing; welps for whelps; dul-cer-mur for dul-ci-mer; with-er-ward for whith-er-ward.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. mosque; 2. charioteer, myriads, bulwarks; 3. imperial, dotage, dulcimer, psaltery, labyrinth; 4. portal, haunts; 6. column.

LESSON CXVI.

RULE.—Be careful not to join the last part of one word to the beginning of the next word.

William Tell.—KNOWLES.

SCENE 1.—A mountain with mist. Gesler seen descending with a hunting pole.

Gesler. Alone—Alone! and every step the mist
Thickens around me! On these mountain tracks
To lose one's way, they say, is sometimes death!
What, ho! Holloa! No tongue replies to me!
What thunder hath the horror of this silence!
Cursed slaves, to let me wander from them! Ho—Holloa!
My voice sounds weaker to mine ear; I've not
The strength to call I had; and through my limbs
Cold tremor runs—and sickening faintness seizes
On my heart. O, heaven, have mercy! Do not see
The color of the hands I lift to thee!
Look only on the strait wherein I stand,
And pity it! Let me not sink—Uphold!
Support me! Mercy! Mercy! (He falls with faintness. Albert enters, almost breathless with the fury of the storm.)
Albert. I'll breathe upon this level, if the wind
Will let me. Ha! a rock to shelter me!
Thanks to it—a man! and fainting. Courage, friend!
Courage.—A stranger that has lost his way—
Take heart—take heart: you are safe. How feel you now?

Ges. Better.

Alb. You have lost your way upon the hills?

Ges. I have.

Alb. And whither would you go?

Ges. To Altorf.

Alb. I'll guide you thither.

Ges. You are a child.

Alb. I know the way; the track I've come

Is harder far to find.

Ges. The track you have come!—What mean you? Sur.
You have not been still farther in the mountains?

Alb. I have traveled from Mount Faigel.

Ges. No one with thee?

Alb. No one but Him.

Ges. Do you not fear these storms?

Alb. He's in the storm.

Ges. And there are torrents, too,
That must be crossed?

Alb. He's by the torrent too.

Ges. You are but a child.

Alb. He will be with a child.

Ges. You are sure you know the way?

Alb. 'Tis but to keep the side of yonder stream.

Ges. But guide me safe, I'll give thee gold.

Alb. I'll guide thee safe without.

Ges. Here's earnest for thee. Here—I'll double that,
Yea, treble it—but let me see the gate of Altorf.
Why do you refuse the gold? Take it

Alb. No.

Ges. You shall.

Alb. I will not.

Ges. Why?

Alb. Because

I do not covet it;—and though I did,
It would be wrong to take it as the price
Of doing one a kindness.

Ges. Ha!—who taught thee that?

Alb. My father.

Ges. Does he live in Altorf?

Alb. No; in the mountains.

Ges. How—a mountaineer?

He should become a tenant of the city:
He would gain by it.

Alb. Not so much as he might lose by it

Ges. What might he lose by it?

Alb. Liberty.

Ges. Indeed! He also taught thee that?

Alb. He did.

Ges. His name?

Alb. This is the way to Altorf, sir.

Ges. I would know thy father's name.

Alb. The day is wasting—we have far to go.

Ges. Thy father's name, I say?

Alb. I will not tell it thee.

Ges. Not tell it me! Why?

Alb. You may be an enemy of his.

Ges. May be a friend.

Alb. May be; but should you be

An enemy—although I would not tell you
My father's name—I would guide you safe to Altorf.
Will you follow me?

Ges. Never mind thy father's name;
What would it profit me to know it? Thy hand;
We are not enemies.

Alb. I never had an enemy.

Ges. Lead on.

Alb. Advance your staff.

As you descend, and fix it well. Come on.

Ges. What! must we take that steep?

Alb. 'Tis nothing! Come,
I'll go before. Never fear—come on! come on! (Exeunt.)

SCENE 2.—The Gate of Altorf. Enter Gesler and Albert.

Alb. You are at the gate of Altorf. (Is returning.)

Ges. Tarry, boy!

Alb. I would be gone ; I am waited for.

Ges. Come back !

Who waits for thee ? Come, tell me ; I am rich
And powerful, and can reward.

Alb. 'Tis close

On evening ; I have far to go ; I'm late.

Ges. Stay ! I can punish, too.

Boy, do you know me ?

Alb. No.

Ges. Why fear you, then,

To trust me with your father's name ?—Speak.

Alb. Why do you desire to know it ?

Ges. You have served me,

And I would thank him, if I chanced to pass
His dwelling.

Alb. 'Twould not please him that a service
So trifling should be made so much of.

Ges. Trifling ! You have saved my life.

Alb. Then do not question me,

But let me go.

Ges. When I have learned from thee

Thy father's name. What, ho ! (Knocks.)

Sentinel. (Within.) Who's there ?

Ges. Gesler. (Soldiers enter.)

Alb. Ha, Gesler !

Ges. (To the soldiers.) Seize him. Wilt thou tell me
Thy father's name ?

Alb. No.

Ges. I can bid them cast thee

Into a dungeon ! Wilt thou tell it now ?

Alb. No.

Ges. I can bid them strangle thee ! Wilt tell it ?

Alb. Never.

Ges. Away with him ! Send Sarnem to me.

(Soldiers take Albert off.)

Behind that boy I see the shadow of
A hand must wear my fetters, or 'twill try
To strip me of my power. How I loathed the free
And fearless air with which he trod the hills !

I wished some way

To find the parent nest of this fine eaglet,
And harrow it ! I'd like to clip the broad
And full grown wing that taught his tender pinion
So bold a flight. (Enter Sarnem.)

Ha, Sarnem ! have the slaves

Attended me returned ?

Sarnem. They have.

Ges. You'll see

That every one of them be laid in fetters.

Sar. I will.

Ges. Did'st see that boy just now ?

Sar. That passed me ?

Ges. Yes.

Sar. A mountaineer.

Ges. You'd say so, saw you him
Upon the hills; he walks them like their lord!
I tell thee, Sarnem, looking on that boy,
I felt I was not master of those hills.
He has a father. Neither promises
Nor threats could draw from him his name—a father
Who talks to him of liberty. I fear that man.

Sar. He may be found.

Ges. He must—and soon
As found disposed of. I live
In danger till I find that man. Send parties
Into the mountains, to explore them far
And wide; and if they chance to light upon
A father, who expects his child, command them
To drag him straight before us. Sarnem, see it done. (Exeunt.)

QUESTIONS.—1. Why does Gesler allude to the color of his hands in line 11? 2. To what purpose is a hunting pole applied? 3. What is meant by, "Here's earnest for thee?"

ERRORS.—air-ness for ear-ness (pronounced er-ness); strangi' for stran-gle.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—Tremor, breathe, mountaineer, dungeon, eaglet, threats, straight.

LESSON CXVII.

RULE.—Be careful to pronounce the little words, like a, the, and, in, etc., distinctly, and not to join them to the next word.

William Tell.—CONTINUED.

SCENE 3.—A chamber in the Castle. Enter Gesler, Officers, and Sarnem, with Tell in chains and guarded.

Sar. Down, slave! Behold the governor.
Down! down! and beg for mercy.

Ges. (Seated.) Does he hear?

Sar. He does, but braves thy power.

Officer. Why don't you smite him for that look?

Ges. Can I believe
My eyes?—He smiles! Nay, grasps
His chains as he would make a weapon of them
To lay the smiter dead. (To Tell.)

Why speakest thou not?

Tell. For wonder.

Ges. Wonder?

Tell. Yes, that thou should'st seem a man.

Ges. What should I seem ?

Tell. A monster !

Ges. Ha ! Beware—Think on thy chains.

Tell. Though they were doubled, and did weigh me down
Prostrate to earth, methinks I could rise up—
Erect, with nothing but the honest pride
Of telling thee, usurper, to thy teeth,
Thou art a monster ! Think upon my chains !
How came they on me ?

Ges. Darest thou question me ?

Tell. Darest thou not answer ?

Ges. Do I hear ?

Tell. Thou dost.

Ges. Beware my vengeance.

Tell. Can it more than kill ?

Ges. Enough—it can do that.

Tell. No ; not enough :

It cannot take away the grace of life—
Its comeliness of look that virtue gives—
Its port erect with consciousness of truth—
Its rich attire of honorable deeds—
Its fair report that's rife on good men's tongues :
It cannot lay its hands on these, no more
Than it can pluck the brightness from the sun,
Or with polluted finger tarnish it.

Ges. But it can make thee writhe.

Tell. It may.

Ges. And groan.

Tell. It may ; and I may cry,

Go on, though it should make me groan again.

Ges. Whence comest thou ?

Tell. From the mountains. Wouldst thou learn
What news from them ?

Ges. Canst tell me any ?

Tell. Ay ; they watch no more the avalanche.

Ges. Why so ?

Tell. Because they look for thee. The hurricane Comes unawares upon them ; from its bed,
The torrent breaks, and finds them in its track.

Ges. What do they then ?

Tell. Thank heaven, it is not thou !
Thou hast perverted nature in them.

There's not a blessing heaven vouchsafes them, but
The thought of thee—doth wither to a curse.

Ges. That's right ! I'd have them like their hills
That never smile, though wanton summer tempt
Them ever so much.

Tell. But they do sometimes smile.

Ges. Ay !—when is that ?

Tell. When they do talk of vengeance.

Ges. Vengeance ! Dare they talk of that ?

Tell. Ay, and expect it too.

Ges. From whence?

Tell. From heaven!

Ges. From heaven?

Tell. And their true hands
Are lifted up to it on every hill
For justice on thee.

Ges. Where's thy abode?

Tell. I told thee on the mountains,

Ges. Art married?

Tell. Yes.

Ges. And hast a family?

Tell. A son.

Ges. A son! Sarnem!

Sar. My lord, the boy.—(Gesler signs to Sarnem to keep silence, and, whispering, sends him off.)

Tell. The boy!—what boy?
Is't mine?—and have they netted my young fledgeling?
Now heaven support me, if they have! He'll own me,
And share his father's ruin! But a look
Would put him on his guard—yet how to give it!
Now, heart, thy nerve; forget thou art flesh, be rock.
They come—they come!
That step—that step—that little step, so light
Upon the ground, how heavy does it fall Upon my heart! I feel my child!—(Enter Sarnem with Albert, whose eyes are riveted on Tell's bow, which Sarnem carries.)
'Tis he!—We can but perish.

Sar. See!

Alb. What?

Sar. Look there!

Alb. I do, what would you have me see?

Sar. Thy father.

Alb. Who? That—that my father!

Tell. My boy—my boy!—my own brave boy!
He's safe! (Aside.)

Sar. (Aside to Gesler.) They're like each other.

Ges. Yet I see no sign

Or recognition to betray the link
Unites a father and his child.

Sar. My lord,
I am sure it is his father. Look at them.
It may be

A preconcerted thing 'gainst such a chance,
That they survey each other coldly thus.

Ges. We shall try. Lead forth the caitiff.

Sar. To a dungeon?

Ges. No; into the court.

Sar. The court, my lord?

Ges. And send
To tell the headsman to make ready. Quick!
The slave shall die!—You marked the boy?

Sar. I did. He started—'tis his father.

Ges. We shall see. Away with him!

Tell. Stop!—Stop!

Ges. What would you?

Tell. Time! A little time to call my thoughts together.

Ges. Thou shalt not have a minute.

Tell. Some one, then, to speak with.

Ges. Hence with him!

Tell. A moment!—Stop!

Let me speak to the boy.

Ges. Is he thy son?

Tell. And if

He were, art thou so lost to nature, as
To send me forth to die before his face?

Ges. Well! speak with him.

Now, Sarnem, mark them well.

Tell. Thou dost not know me, boy—and well for thee
Thou dost not. I'm the father of a son
About thy age. Thou,
I see, wast born like him upon the hills;
If thou should'st 'scape thy present thralldom, he May chance to cross thee; if he should, I pray thee
Relate to him what has been passing here,
And say I laid my hand upon thy head,
And said to thee—if he were here, as thou art,
'Thus would I bless him. Mayest thou live, my boy!
To see thy country free, or die for her,
As I do! (Albert weeps.)

Sar. Mark! he weeps.

Tell. Were he my son,
He would not shed a tear! He would remember
The cliff where he was bred, and learned to scan
A thousand fathoms' depth of nether air;
Where he was trained to hear the thunder talk,
And meet the lightning eye to eye—where last
We spoke together—when I told him death
Bestowed the brightest gem that graces life—
Embraced for virtue's sake—He shed a tear!
Now were he by I'd talk to him, and his cheek
Should never blanch, nor moisture dim his eye—
I'd talk to him—

Sar. He falters!

Tell. 'Tis too much!

And yet it must be done! I'd talk to him—

Ges. Of what?

Tell. The mother, tyrant, thou dost make
A widow of!—I'd talk to him of her.
I'd bid him tell her, next to liberty,
Her name was the last word my lips pronounced.
And I would charge him never to forget
To love and cherish her, as he would have
His father's dying blessing rest upon him!

Sar. You see, as he doth prompt the other acts.

Tell. So well he bears it, he doth vanquish me.

My boy—my boy!—O for the hills, the hills,
To see him bound along their tops again,
With liberty.

Sar. Was there not all the father in that look?

Ges. Yet 'tis 'gainst nature.

Sar. Not if he believes

To own the son would be to make him share
The father's death.

Ges. I did not think of that!—'Tis well
The boy is not thy son—I've destined him
To die along with thee.

Tell. To die?—For what?

Ges. For having braved my power, as thou hast. Lead
Them forth.

Tell. He's but a child.

Ges. Away with them!

Tell. Perhaps an only child.

Ges. No matter.

Tell. He may have a mother.

Ges. So the viper hath;

And yet, who spares it for the mother's sake?

Tell. I talk to stone! I talk to it as though
'Twere flesh; and know 'tis none. I'll talk to it
No more. Come, my boy—

I taught thee how to live—I'll show thee how to die.

Ges. He is thy child?

Tell. He is my child.

Ges. I've wrung a tear from him! Thy name?

Tell. My name?

It matters not to keep it from thee now;

My name is Tell.

Ges. Tell!—William Tell?

Tell. The same.

Ges. What! he, so famed 'bove all his countrymen
For guiding o'er the stormy lake the boat?
And such a master of his bow, 'tis said
His arrows never miss!—Indeed—I'll take Exquisite vengeance!—Mark! I'll spare thy life—
Thy boy's too—both of you are free—on one Condition.

Tell. Name it.

Ges. I would see you make
A trial of your skill with that same bow
You shoot so well with.

Tell. Name the trial you
Would have me make.

Ges. You look upon your boy
As though instinctively you guessed it.

Tell. Look upon my boy!—What mean you? Look upon
My boy as though I guessed it!—Guessed the trial

You'd have me make !—Guessed it
 Instinctively ! You do not mean—No—no—
 You would not have me make a trial of
 My skill upon my child !—Impossible !
 I do not guess your meaning.

Ges. I would see
 Thee hit an apple at the distance of
 A hundred paces.

Tell. Is my boy to hold it ?

Ges. No.

Tell. No !—I'll send the arrow through the core !

Ges. It is to rest upon his head.

Tell. Great heaven, you hear him !

Ges. Thou dost hear the choice I give—
 Such trial of the skill thou art master of,
 Or death to both of you ; not otherwise
 To be escaped.

Tell. O, monster !

Ges. Wilt thou do it ?

Alb. He will ! he will !

Tell. Ferocious monster !—Make
 A father murder his own child.

Ges. Take off
 His chains if he consent.

Tell. With his own hand !

Ges. Does he consent ?

Alb. He does. (Gesler signs to his officers, who proceed to take off Tell's chains ; Tell all the time unconscious what they do.)

Tell. With his own hand !
 Murder his child with his own hand—This hand !
 The hand I've led him, when an infant, by !—
 'Tis beyond horror—'tis most horrible.
 Amazement ! (His chains fall off.) What's that you've done to me !
 Villains ! put on my chains again. My hands
 Are free from blood, and have no gust for it,
 That they should drink my child's ! Here ! here ! I'll not Murder my boy for Gesler.

Alb. Father—Father !—
 You will not hit me, father !—

Tell. Hit thee ! Send
 The arrow through thy brain—or, missing that,
 Shoot out an eye—or, if thine eye escape,
 Mangle the cheek I've seen thy mother's lips
 Cover with kisses !—Hit thee—hit a hair
 Of thee, and cleave thy mother's heart—

Ges. Dost thou consent ?

Tell. Give me my bow and quiver.

Ges. For what ?

Tell. —To shoot my boy !

Alb. No—father—no !

To save me !—you'll be sure to hit the apple—
 Will you not save me, father ?

Tell. Lead me forth—
I'll make the trial!

Alb. Thank you!

Tell. Thank me? Do
You know for what?—I will not make the trial,
To take him to his mother in my arms,
And lay him down a corse before her!

Ges. Then he dies this moment—and you certainly Do murder him whose life you have a chance
To save, and will not use it.

Tell. Well—I'll do it: I'll make the trial.

Alb. Father—

Tell. Speak not to me:
Let me not hear thy voice—Thou must be dumb;
And so should all things be—Earth should be dumb;
And heaven—unless its thunders muttered at
The deed, and sent a bolt to stop it!—Give me
My bow and quiver!

Ges. When all's ready.

Tell. Well—Lead on!

QUESTIONS.—1. Why does Gesler express joy that his subjects are unhappy? 2. Why does Albert appear not to recognize his father? 3. Why does Tell at last acknowledge Albert?

ERRORS.—weep-on for weap-on (pronounced wep-on); a-gin for a-gain (pronounced a-gen); na-tur for na-ture.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—avalanche, hurricane, vouchsafe, fledgeling; thralldom, instinctively, amazement, quiver, consciousness, rife, tarnish.

LESSON CXVIII.

RULE.—When two or more consonants come together, let the pupil be careful to sound every one distinctly.

William Tell.—CONTINUED.

SCENE 4.—Enter slowly, people in evident distress—Officers, Sarnem, Gesler, Tell, Albert, and soldiers—one bearing Tell's bow and quiver—another with a basket of apples.

Ges. That is your ground. Now shall they measure thence
A hundred paces. Take the distance.

Tell. Is the line a true one?

Ges. True or not, what is't to thee?

Tell. What is't to me?—A little thing,

A very little thing—a yard or two

Is nothing here or there—were it a wolf

I shot at!—Never mind.

Ges. Be thankful, slave,

Our grace accords thee life on any terms.

Tell. I will be thankful, Gesler!—Villain, stop!

You measure to the sun.

Ges. And what of that?

What matter whether to or from the sun?

Tell. I'd have it at my back—The sun should shine

Upon the mark, and not on him that shoots.

I cannot see to shoot against the sun—

I will not shoot against the sun!

Ges. Give him his way! Thou hast cause to bless my mercy

Tell. I shall remember it. I'd like to see

The apple I'm to shoot at.

Ges. Stay! show me the basket!—there—

Tell. You've picked the smallest one.

Ges. I know I have.

Tell. O! do you?—But you see

The color on't is dark—I'd have it light,

To see it better.

Ges. Take it as it is:

Thy skill will be the greater if thou hitt'st it.

Tell. True—true!—I did not think of that—I wonder

I did not think of that—Give me some chance

To save my boy! (Throws away the apple with all his force.)

I will not murder him,

If I can help it—for the honor of

The form thou wearest, if all the heart is gone.

Ges. Well: choose thyself.

Tell. Have I a friend among the lookers on?

Verner. (Rushing forward.) Here, Tell!

Tell. I thank thee, Verner!

He is a friend runs out into a storm

To shake a hand with us. I must be brief.

When once the bow is bent, we cannot take

The shot too soon. Verner, whatever be

The issue of this hour, the common cause

Must not stand still. Let not to-morrow's sun

Set on the tyrant's banner! Verner! Verner!

The boy!—the boy!—Thinkest thou he hath the courage

To stand it?

Ver. Yes.

Tell. Does he tremble?

Ver. No.

Tell. Art sure?

Ver. I am.

Tell. How looks he?

Ver. Clear and smilingly.
If you doubt it—look yourself.

Tell. No—no—my friend ;
To hear it is enough.

Ver. He bears himself so much above his years—

Tell. I know !—I know.

Ver. With constancy so modest—

Tell. I was sure he would—

Ver. And looks with such relying love
And reverence upon you—

Tell. Man !—Man !—Man !

No more ! Already I'm too much the father

To act the man !—Verner, no more, my friend !

I would be flint—flint—flint. Don't make me feel

I'm not—do not mind me ! Take the boy

And set him, Verner, with his back to me.

Set him upon his knees—and place this apple

Upon his head, so that the stem may front me,

Thus, Verner ; charge him to keep steady—tell him

I'll hit the apple !—Verner, do all this

More briefly than I tell it thee.

Ver. Come, Albert ! (Leading him out.)

Alb. May I not speak with him before I go ?

Ver. No.

Alb. I would only kiss his hand.

Ver. You must not.

Alb. I must !—I cannot go from him without.

Ver. It is his will you should.

Alb. His will is it !

I am content then—come.

Tell. My boy ! (Holding out his arms to him.)

Alb. My father ! (Rushing into Tell's arms.)

Tell. If thou canst bear it, should not I !—Go now,

My son—and keep in mind that I can shoot—

Go boy—Be thou but steady, I will hit

The apple—Go !—God bless thee—go.—My bow !

(The bow is handed to him.)

Thou wilt not fail thy master, wilt thou ?—thou

Hast never failed him yet, old servant—No,

I'm sure of thee—I know thy honesty,

Thou art staunch—staunch.—Let me see my quiver.

Ges. Give him a single arrow.

Tell. Do you shoot ?

Soldier. I do.

Tell. Is it so you pick an arrow, friend ?

The point you see is bent ; the feather jagged—(Breaks it.)

That's all the use 'tis fit for.

Ges. Let him have another.

Tell. Why 'tis better than the first,

But yet not good enough for such an aim

As I'm to take—'Tis heavy in the shaft ;

I'll not shoot with it ! (Throws it away.) Let me see my quiver.

Bring it !—"Tis not one arrow in a dozen
I'd take to shoot with at a dove, much less
A dove like that.—

Ges. It matters not.

Show him the quiver.

Tell. See if the boy is ready.

(Tell here hides an arrow under his vest.)

Ver. He is.

Tell. I'm ready too! Keep silent for Heav'n's sake, and do not stir—and let me have

Your prayers—your prayers—and be my witnesses

That if his life's in peril from my hand,

'Tis only for the chance of saving it. (To the people.)

Ges. Go on.

Tell. I will.

O friends, for mercy's sake, keep motionless

And silent. (Tell shoots—a shout of exultation bursts from the crowd. Tell's head drops on his bosom; he with difficulty supports himself upon his bow.)

Ver. (Rushing in with Albert.) Thy boy is safe, no hair of him is touched.

Alb. Father, I'm safe—Your Albert's safe, dear father,—

Speak to me! Speak to me!

Ver. He cannot, boy!

Alb. You grant him life?

Ges. I do.

Alb. And we are free?

Ges. You are. (Crossing angrily behind.)

Alb. Thank heaven!—thank heaven!

Ver. Open his vest,

And give him air. (Albert opens his father's vest, and the arrow drops. Tell starts—fixes his eye on Albert, and clasps him to his breast.)

Tell. My boy!—My boy!

Ges. For what

Hid you that arrow in your breast?—Speak, slave!

Tell. To kill thee, tyrant, had I slain my boy!

QUESTIONS.—1. In what kind of tone should you read, "True, I did not think of that," line 31? 2. Why? 3. Relate the whole story in your own language. 4. What was the fate of Gesler?

ERRORS.—stid-dy for stead-y; pint for point; bo-som for bos-om. pronounced boze-um.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—reverence, staunch, briefly, constancy, vest, peril, issue, tyrant, banner, jagged, motionless.

LESSON CXIX.

RULE.—When similar sounds come at the end of one word, and at the beginning of the next word, they must not be blended into one.

EXAMPLE.—Flowers soon fade.

He addresseth the understanding.

Presumptuous sins.

Time flies silently.

A parent's sorrow.

The Vision of Mirza.—ADDISON.

1. On the fifth day of the moon, which according to the custom of my forefathers, I always kept holy, after having washed myself, and offered up my morning devotions, I ascended the high hills of Bagdat, in order to pass the rest of the day in meditation and prayer. As I was here airing myself on the tops of the mountains, I fell into a profound contemplation on the vanity of human life; and, passing from one thought to another, "Surely," said I, "man is but a shadow, and life a dream."

2. While I was thus musing, I cast my eyes towards the summit of a rock, that was not far from me, where I discovered one, in the habit of a shepherd, with a musical instrument in his hand. As I looked upon him he applied it to his lips, and began to play upon it. The sound of it was exceeding sweet, and wrought into a variety of tunes, that were inexpressibly melodious, and altogether different from any thing I had ever heard. They put me in mind of those heavenly airs, that are played to the departed souls of good men upon their first arrival in paradise, to wear out the impressions of the last agonies, and qualify them for the pleasures of that happy place.

3. My heart melted away in secret raptures. I had been often told, that the rock before me was the haunt of a Genius; and that several had been entertained with music, who had passed by it, but never heard that the musician had before made himself visible. When he had raised my thoughts, by those transporting airs which he played, to taste the pleasure of his conversation, as I looked upon him, like one astonished, he beckoned to me, and, by the waving of his hand, directed me to approach the place where he sat.

4. I drew near, with that reverence which is due to a superior nature ; and, as my heart was entirely subdued by the captivating strains I had heard, I fell down at his feet, and wept. The Genius smiled upon me with a look of compassion and affability that familiarized him to my imagination, and, at once, dispelled all the fears and apprehensions with which I approached him. He lifted me from the ground, and taking me by the hand, "Mirza," said he, "I have heard thee in thy soliloquies : follow me."

5. He then led me to the highest pinnacle of the rock, and, placing me on the top of it, "Cast thy eyes eastward," said he, "and tell me what thou seest." "I see," said I, "A huge valley, and a prodigious tide of water rolling through it." "The valley that thou seest," said he, "is the valley of misery, and the tide of water that thou seest is part of the great tide of eternity." "What is the reason," said I, "that the tide I see rises out of a thick mist at one end, and again loses itself in a thick mist at the other ?"

6. "What thou seest," said he, "is that portion of eternity which is called time, measured out by the sun, and reaching from the beginning of the world to its consummation. Examine now," said he, "this sea, that is thus bounded with darkness at both ends, and tell me what thou discoverest in it." "I see a bridge," said I, "standing in the midst of the tide." "The bridge thou seest," said he, "is human life : consider it attentively." Upon a more leisurely survey of it, I found that it consisted of three-score and ten entire arches, with several broken arches, which, added to those that were entire, made up the number about a hundred.

7. As I was counting the arches, the Genius told me that the bridge consisted, at first, of a thousand arches ; but that a great flood swept away the rest, and left the bridge in the ruinous condition I now beheld it. "But tell me farther," said he, "what thou discoverest on it." "I see multitudes of people passing over it," said I, "and a black cloud hanging on each end of it."

8. As I looked more attentively, I saw several of the passengers dropping through the bridge into the great tide that flowed underneath it ; and, upon farther examination, perceived there were innumerable trap-doors that lay concealed in the bridge, which the passengers no sooner trod upon, but they fell through them into the tide, and immediately disappeared. These hidden pit-falls were set very thick at the entrance of the bridge, so that throngs of people no sooner broke through the cloud, than many of them fell into them. They grew thinner towards the middle, but multiplied and lay closer together towards the end of the arches that were entire.

9. There were indeed some persons,—but their number was very small,—that continued a kind of hobbling march on the broken arches, but fell through, one after another, being quite tired and spent with so long a walk. I passed some time in the contemplation of this wonderful structure, and the great variety of objects which it presented.

10. My heart was filled with a deep melancholy, to see several dropping, unexpectedly, in the midst of mirth and jollity, and catching by every thing that stood by them to save themselves. Some were looking up towards the heavens in a thoughtful posture, and, in the midst of a speculation, stumbled and fell out of sight. Multitudes were very busy in the pursuit of bubbles, that glittered in their eyes and danced before them; but often, when they thought themselves within the reach of them, their footing failed, and down they sunk.

11. In this confusion of objects, I observed some with cimeters in their hands, and others with lancets, who ran to and fro upon the bridge, thrusting several persons on trap-doors which did not seem to lie in their way, and which they might have escaped, had they not been thus forced upon them.

12. The Genius, seeing me indulge myself in this melancholy prospect, told me I had dwelt long enough upon it. "Take thine eyes off the bridge," said he, "and tell me if thou yet seest any thing thou dost not comprehend." Upon looking up, "What mean," said I, "those great flights of birds that are perpetually hovering about the bridge, and settling upon it from time to time? I see vultures, harpies, ravens, cormorants, and, among many other feathered creatures, several little winged boys, that perch, in great numbers, upon the middle arches."

13. "These," said the Genius, "are Envy, Avarice, Superstition, Despair, Love, with the like cares and passions that infest human life." I here fetched a deep sigh. "Alas!" said I, "man was made in vain! how is he given away to misery and mortality! tortured in life, and swallowed up in death!" The Genius, being moved with compassion towards me, bid me quit so uncomfortable a prospect. "Look no more," said he, "on man, in the first stage of his existence, in his setting out for eternity; but cast thine eye on that thick mist, into which the tide bears the several generations of mortals that fall into it."

14. I directed my sight as I was ordered, and—whether or no the good Genius strengthened it with any supernatural force, or dissipated part of the mist, that was before too thick for the eye to penetrate—I saw the valley opening at the farther end, and spreading forth into an immense ocean, that had a huge rock of adamant running through the midst of it, and dividing it into two equal parts. The clouds still rested on one half of it, insomuch that I could discover nothing in it: but the other appeared to me a vast ocean, planted with innumerable islands, that were covered with fruits and flowers, and interwoven with a thousand little shining seas, that ran among them.

15. I could see persons dressed in glorious habits, with garlands upon their heads, passing among the trees, lying down by the sides of fountains, or resting on beds of flowers; and could hear a confused harmony of singing birds, falling waters, human voices, and musical instruments. Gladness grew in me upon the discovery of so delightful a scene. I wished for the wings of an eagle, that I might fly away to those happy seats; but the Genius told me, there was no passage to them, except through the gates of death, that I saw opening every moment upon the bridge.

16. “The islands,” said he, “that lie so fresh and green before thee, and with which the whole face of the ocean appears spotted, as far as thou canst see, are more in number than the sands on the sea shore. There are myriads of islands behind those which thou here discoverest, reaching farther than thine eye, or even thine imagination, can extend itself. These are the mansions of good men after death, who, according to the degrees and kinds of virtue in which they excelled, are distributed among these several islands, which abound with pleasures of different kinds and degrees, suitable to the relishes and perfections of those who are settled in them. Every island is a paradise accommodated to its respective inhabitants.

17. “Are not these, O Mirza, habitations worth contending for? Does life appear miserable, that gives thee opportunities of earning such a reward? Is death to be feared, that will convey thee to so happy an existence? Think not man was made in vain, who has such an eternity reserved for him.” I gazed with inexpressible pleasure on those happy islands. At length, said I, “Show me now, I beseech thee, the secrets that lie under those dark clouds, that cover the ocean on the other side of the rock of adamant.”

18. The Genius making me no answer, I turned about to address myself to him a second time, but I found that he had left me. I then turned again to the vision which I had been so long contemplating; but, instead of the rolling tide, the arched bridge, and the happy islands, I saw nothing but the long, hollow valley of Bagdat, with oxen, sheep, and camels grazing upon the sides of it.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is this kind of fiction called? 2. Why is the scene of almost all allegories laid in the East? 3. Why is instruction conveyed by parable or allegory, more likely to be remembered than that communicated by any other method? 4. What is figured by the arches of the bridge? 5. What by the pit-falls? 6. Who are the persons with cimeters?

ERRORS.—'cor-ding for ac-cord-ing; in-strur-ment for in-stru-ment; 'ston-ish-ed for as-ton-ish-ed.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. ascended, contemplation; 2. impressions; 3. entertained, transporting; 4. captivating, dispelled, apprehensions; 5. pinnacle; 6. consummation; 7. arches; 8. concealed; 10. posture; 14. strengthened, supernatural, interwoven; 16. myriads, imagination; 17. inexpressible.

LESSON CXX.

RULE.—While each pupil reads, let the rest observe, and then mention which syllables were pronounced wrong, and which were omitted or indistinctly sounded.

A Dirge.—CROLY

- 1 "Earth to earth, and dust to dust!"
 Here the evil and the just,
 Here the youthful and the old,
 Here the fearful and the bold,
 Here the matron and the maid,
 In one silent bed are laid;
 Here the vassal and the king,
 Side by side, lie withering:
 Here the sword and scepter rust:
 "Earth to earth, and dust to dust!"
2. Age on age shall roll along,
 O'er this pale and mighty throng;
 Those that wept them, those that weep,
 All shall with these sleepers sleep:
 Brothers, sisters of the worm,
 Summer's sun, or winter's storm,

Song of peace, or battle's roar,
 Ne'er shall break their slumbers more ;
 Death shall keep his sullen trust,
 " Earth to earth, and dust to dust !"

3. But a day is coming fast,
 Earth, thy mightiest and thy last !
 It shall come in fear and wonder,
 Heralded by trump and thunder :
 It shall come in strife and toil ;
 It shall come in blood and spoil ;
 It shall come in empires' groans,
 Burning temples, trampled thrones :
 Then, ambition, rue thy lust !
 " Earth to earth, and dust to dust !"
4. Then shall come the judgment sign ;
 In the east, the king shall shine ;
 Flashing from heav'n's golden gate,
 Thousands, thousands round his state ;
 Spirits with the crown and plume ;
 Tremble, then, thou solemn tomb ;
 Heav'n shall open on our sight ;
 Earth be turned to living light,
 Kingdom of the ransomed just !
 " Earth to earth, and dust to dust !"
5. Then thy mount, Jerusalem,
 Shall be gorgeous as a gem :
 Then shall in the desert rise
 Fruits of more than Paradise,
 Earth by angel feet be trod,
 One great garden of her God !
 Till are dried the martyr's tears
 Through a thousand glorious years :
 Now in hope of him we trust,
 " Earth to earth, and dust to dust !"

QUESTIONS.—1. For what occasion is a "Dirge" used ? 2. What is inculcated in the first verse ? 3. What is taught in the second verse ? 4. What in the fourth ? 5. What in the fifth ? 6. What is the argument of the whole ?

ERRORS.—spile for spoil ; thou-suns for thousands ; sper-ets for spir-its ; mat-ron for ma-tron ; trim-ble for trem-ble.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. vassal ; 3. heralded, ambition ; 4. ransomed 5. gorgeous, paradise, martyr.

LESSON CXXI.

RULE.—Be careful and give a full sound to the vowels. Regard to this rule will correct the common flat, clipping and uninteresting way in which many read.

EXERCISES in which the vowels italicised are to be prolonged.

Hail! holy light.

We praise thee, O Lord God.

These names of the Deity are seldom pronounced with that full and solemn sound that is proper. Lud and Law-ard and Gud and Gawd are too frequently used instead of the proper sounds. If the pupil can learn to speak the three words, "O—Lord—God," properly, it will be worth no little attention. Every pupil ought to be exercised on these words till they pronounce them properly and in a full and solemn tone.

Ladies' Head Dresses.—SPECTATOR.

1. There is not so variable a thing in nature as a lady's head-dress: within my own memory, I have known it rise and fall above thirty degrees. About ten years ago, it shot up to a very great height, insomuch that the female part of our species were much taller than the men. The women were of such an enormous stature, that we appeared as grasshoppers before them. At present the whole sex is in a manner dwarfed and shrunk into a race of beauties that seem almost another species.

2. I remember several ladies who were once very near seven feet high, that at present want some inches of five. How they came to be thus curtailed, I cannot learn. Whether the whole sex be at present under any penance, which we know nothing of; or whether they have cast their head-dresses in order to surprise us with something of that kind which shall be entirely new; or whether some of the tallest of the sex, being too cunning for the rest, have contrived this method to make themselves appear sizeable, is still a secret: though I find some are of opinion, they are at present like trees new lopped and pruned, that will certainly sprout up and flourish with greater heads than before.

3. For my own part, as I do not love to be insulted by women who are taller than myself, I admire the sex much more in their present humiliation, which has reduced them to their natural dimensions, than when they had extended their persons, and lengthened themselves out into formidable and gigantic figures. I am not for adding to the beautiful edifices of nature, not for raising any whimsical superstructure upon her plans : I must therefore repeat it, that I am highly pleased with the coiffure now in fashion, and think it shows the good sense which at present very much reigns among the valuable part of the sex. One may observe that women in all ages have taken more pains than men to adorn the outside of their heads ; and indeed I very much admire, that those architects, who raise such wonderful structures out of ribins, lace, and wire, have not been recorded for their respective inventions. It is certain that there have been as many orders in these kinds of buildings, as in those which have been made of marble ; sometimes they rise in the shape of a pyramid, sometimes like a tower, and sometimes like a steeple.

4. In Juvenal's time, the building grew by several orders and stories, as he has very humorously described it.

With curls on curls they build her head before,
And mount it with a formidable tower.

But I do not remember, in any part of my reading, that the head-dress aspired to such an extravagance as in the fourteenth century : when it was built up in a couple of cones or spires which stood so excessively high on each side of the head, that a woman who was but a pigmy without her head-dress appeared like a colossus upon putting it on. Monsieur Paradin says, "That these old-fashioned fontanges rose one ell above the head ; that they were pointed like steeples, and had long loose pieces of crape fastened to the tops of them, which were curiously fringed, and hung down their backs like streamers."

5. The women might possibly have carried this Gothic building much higher, had not a famous monk, Thomas Connecte by name, attacked it with great zeal and resolution. This holy man traveled from place to place to preach down this monstrous commode ; and succeeded so well in it, that, as the magicians sacrificed their books to the flames upon the preaching of an apostle, many of the women threw down their head-dresses in the middle of his sermon, and made a bonfire of them within sight of the pulpit. He was so renowned, as well for sanctity of his life, as his manner of preaching, that he had often a congregation of twenty thousand people ; the men placing themselves on the one side of the pulpit, and the women on the other, they appeared, to use the similitude of an ingenious writer, like a forest of cedars with their heads reaching to the clouds.

6. He so warmed and animated the people against this monstrous ornament, that it lay under a kind of persecution ; and whenever it appeared in public, was pelted down by the rabble, who flung stones at the persons that wore it. But notwithstanding this prodigy vanished while the preacher was among them, it began to appear again some months after his departure, or, to tell it in Monsieur Paradin's own words, " The women, that, like snails in a fright, had drawn in their horns, shot them out again as soon as the danger was over."

7. It is usually observed, that a good reign is the only proper time for the making of laws against the exorbitance of power ; in the same manner an excessive head-dress may be attacked the most effectually when the fashion is against it. I do therefore recommend this paper to my female readers by way of prevention.

8. I would desire the fair sex to consider how impossible it is for them to add any thing that can be ornamental to what is already the masterpiece of nature. The head has the most beautiful appearance, as well as the highest station, in the human figure. Nature has laid out all her art in beautifying the face ; she has touched it with vermilion, planted in it a double row of ivory, made it the seat of smiles and blushes, lighted it up and enlivened it with the brightness of the eyes, hung it on each side with curious organs of sense, given it airs and graces that cannot be described, and surrounded it with such a flowing shade of hair, as sets all its beauties in the most agreeable light : in short, she seems to have designed the head as the cupola to the most glorious of her works ; and when we load it with such a pile of supernumerary ornaments, we destroy the symmetry of the human figure, and foolishly contrive to call off the eye from great and real beauties, to childish gewgaws, ribins, and bone-lace.

QUESTIONS.—1. Do you know any of the authors who contributed to the Spectator ? 2. In whose reign was it published ? 3. May not the remarks in this lesson be with propriety applied to fashions in general ? 4. Are we at liberty to disregard fashion entirely ?

ERRORS.—ar-che-lects for ar-chi-lects (pronounced ar-ke-lects) ; gi-jan-tic for gi-gan-tic.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. degrees, enormous ; 2. curtailed ; 3. humiliation, edifices, coiffure ; 4. century, colossus ; 5. commode, similitude ; 8. master-piece.

LESSON CXXII.

RULE.—Pronounce the consonant sounds very distinctly.

EXAMPLE.—Pronounce the consonant sounds that are italicised.—b-old,
d-eign, f-ather, g-ather, j-oy, l-ight, m-an, n-o, q-ueer, p-r-ay, v-ale, ~~w~~-oe, y-ours, z-one, h-ang.

Apostrophe to the Ocean.—BYRON.

1. There is a pleasure in the pathless woods,
 There is a rapture on the lonely shore,
 There is society where none intrudes
 By the deep sea, and music in its roar.
 I love not man the less, but Nature more,
 From these our interviews, in which I steal
 From all I may be, or have been before,
 To mingle with the universe and feel
 What I can ne'er express, yet cannot all conceal.
2. Roll on, thou deep and dark blue ocean—roll!
 Ten thousand fleets sweep over thee in vain,
 Man marks the earth with ruin—his control
 Stops with the shore:—upon the watery plain
 The wrecks are all thy deed, nor doth remain
 A shadow of man's ravage, save his own,
 When for a moment, like a drop of rain,
 He sinks into thy depths with bubbling groan,
 Without a grave, unknelled, uncoffined, and unknown.

* * * * *

3. The armaments which thunderstrike the walls
 Of rock-built cities, bidding nations quake,
 And monarchs tremble in their capitals;
 The oak leviathans, whose huge ribs make
 Their clay creator the vain title take
 Of lord of thee, and arbiter of war;
 These are thy toys, and, as the snowy flake,
 They melt into thy yeast of waves, which mar
 Alike the Armada's pride, or spoils of Trafalgar.
4. Thy shores are empires, changed in all save thee—
 Assyria, Greece, Rome, Carthage,—what are they?
 Thy waters wasted them while they were free,
 And many a tyrant since; their shores obey
 The stranger, slave, or savage; their decay
 Has dried up realms to deserts:—not so thou,
 Unchangeable save to thy wild waves' play—
 Time writes no wrinkles on thine azure brow—
 Such as creation's dawn beheld, thou rollest now.

5. Thou glorious mirror, where the Almighty's form
 Glasses itself in tempests ; in all time,
 Calm or convulsed—in breeze, or gale, or storm,
 Icing the pole, or in the torrid clime
 Dark heaving ;—boundless, endless, and sublime—
 The image of Eternity—the throne
 Of the Invisible ; even from out thy slime
 The monsters of the deep are made ; each zone
 Obeys thee—thou goest forth, dread, fathomless, alone.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is the society which exists where none intrudes ? 2. What is meant by "oak leviathans !" 3. How is the ocean the image of eternity ?

ERRORS.—rap-tor for rap-ture ; 'spress for ex-press ; mo-munt for mo-ment ; ar-mum-ments for ar-ma-ments.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. interviews ; 2. unknelled ; 3. thunder-strike, leviathans, arbiter ; 4. realms, azure.

LESSON CXXIII.

RULE.—Be careful to speak little words, such as a, in, at, on, to, by, etc., very distinctly, and yet not to dwell on them so long as on the more important words.

Reflections in Westminster Abbey.

ADDISON.

1. When I am in a serious humor, I very often walk by myself in Westminster Abbey, where the gloominess of the place, and the use to which it is applied, with the solemnity of the building, and the condition of the people who lie in it, are apt to fill the mind with a kind of melancholy, or rather thoughtfulness, that is not disagreeable. I yesterday passed a whole afternoon in the church-yard, the cloisters, and the church ; amusing myself with the tomb-stones and inscriptions which I met with in those several regions of the dead.

2. Most of them recorded nothing else of the buried person, but that he was born upon one day, and died upon another ; the whole history of his life being comprehended in these two circumstances that are common to all mankind. I could not but look upon those registers of existence, whether of brass or marble, as a kind of satire upon the departed persons, who had left no other memorial of themselves, but that they were born, and that they died.

3. Upon my going into the church, I entertained myself with the digging of a grave ; and saw, in every shovelfull of it that was thrown up, the fragment of a bone or skull, intermixed with a kind of fresh mouldering earth, that, some time or other, had a place in the composition of a human body. Upon this, I began to consider with myself, what innumerable multitudes of people lay confused together under the pavements of that ancient cathedral ; how men and women, friends and enèemies, priests and soldiers, monks and prebendaries, were crumbled amongst one another, and blended together in the same common mass ; how beauty, strength, and youth, with old age, weakness, and deformity, lay undistinguished in the same promiscuous heap of matter.

4. After having thus surveyed this great magazine of mortality as it were in the lump, I examined it more particularly by the accounts which I found on several of the monuments which are raised in every quarter of that ancient fabric. Some of them were covered with such extravagant epitaphs, that, if it were possible for the dead person to be acquainted with them, he would blush at the praises which his friends have bestowed upon him. There are others so excessively modest, that they deliver the character of the person departed in Greek or Hebrew ; and by that means are not understood once in a twelvemonth. In the poetical quarter, I found that there were poets who had no monuments, and monuments which had no poets. I observed, indeed, that the present war had filled the church with many of those uninhabited monuments, which had been erected to the memory of persons whose bodies were perhaps buried in the plains of Blenheim, or in the bosom of the ocean.

5. I could not but be very much delighted with several modern epitaphs, which are written with great elegance of expression and justness of thought, and which therefore do honor to the living as well as the dead. As a foreigner is very apt to conceive an idea of the ignorance or politeness of a nation from the turn of their public monuments and inscriptions, they should be submitted to the perusal of men of learning and genius, before they are put into execution. Sir Cloudesley Shovel's monument has very often given me great offence. Instead of the brave rough English admiral which was the distinguishing character of that plain gallant man, he is represented on his tomb by the figure of a beau, dressed in a long periwig, and reposing himself upon velvet cushions under a canopy of state.

6. The inscription is answerable to the monument ; for, instead of celebrating the many remarkable actions he had performed in the service of his country, it acquaints us only with the manner of his death, in which it was impossible for him to reap any honor. The Dutch, whom we are apt to despise for want of genius, show an infinitely greater taste in their buildings and works of this nature, than we meet with in those of our own country. The monuments of their admirals, which have been erected at the public expense, represent them like themselves, and are adorned with rostral crowns and naval ornaments, with beautiful festoons of sea-weed, shells, and coral.

7. I know that entertainments of this nature are apt to raise dark and dismal thoughts in timorous minds and gloomy imaginations; but for my own part, though I am always serious, I do not know what it is to be melancholy; and can therefore take a view of nature in her deep and solemn scenes, with the same pleasure as in her most gay and delightful ones. By these means I can improve myself with objects which others consider with terror.

8. When I look upon the tombs of the great, every emotion of envy dies in me; when I read the epitaphs of the beautiful, every inordinate desire goes out; when I meet with the grief of parents upon a tomb-stone, my heart melts with compassion; when I see the tomb of parents themselves, I consider the vanity of grieving for those whom we must quickly follow. When I see kings lying by those who deposed them; when I consider rival wits placed side by side, or the holy men that divided the world with their contests and disputes; I reflect with sorrow and astonishment on the little competitions, factions, and debates of mankind. When I read the several dates of the tombs, of some that died yesterday, and some six hundred years ago, I consider that great day when we shall all of us be contemporaries, and make our appearance together.

QUESTIONS.—1. To what use is Westminster Abbey applied? 2. What reflections are apt to arise in the mind on visiting such a place? 3. Are such reflections salutary?

ERRORS.—fur-reign-er for for-eign-er; Blen-heem for Blen-heim (pronounced Blen-hime); an-cient pronounced ane-shent; sa-tire for sat-ire.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. inscriptions, cloisters; 4. fabric, epitaphs; 6. genius, rostral; 8. contemporaries.

LESSON CXXIV.

RULE.—Let the pupil stand at as great a distance from the teacher as possible, and then try to read so loud and distinctly that the teacher may hear each syllable.

The Journey of a Day: A Picture of Human Life.—DR. JOHNSON.

1. Obidah, the son of Abensina, left the caravansary early in the morning, and pursued his journey through the plains of Hindostan. He was fresh and vigorous with rest; he was animated with hope; he was incited by desire: he walked swiftly forward over the valleys, and saw the hills gradually rising before him.

2. As he passed along, his ears were delighted with the morning song of the bird of paradise; he was fanned by the last flutters of the sinking breeze, and sprinkled with dew by groves of spices: he sometimes contemplated the towering height of the oak, monarch of the hills; and sometimes caught the gentle fragrance of the primrose, eldest daughter of the spring: all his senses were gratified, and all care was banished from his heart.

3. Thus he went on till the sun approached his meridian, and the increasing heat preyed upon his strength; he then looked round about him for some more commodious path. He saw, on his right hand, a grove, that seemed to wave its shades as a sign of invitation; he entered it, and found the coolness and verdure irresistibly pleasant. He did not, however, forget whither he was traveling, but found a narrow way, bordered with flowers, which appeared to have the same direction with the main road, and was pleased, that, by this happy experiment, he had found means to unite pleasure with business, and to gain the rewards of diligence without suffering its fatigues.

4. He, therefore, still continued to walk for a time, without the least remission of his ardor, except that he was sometimes tempted to stop by the music of the birds, whom the heat had assembled in the shade, and sometimes amused himself with plucking the flowers that covered the banks on either side, or the fruits that hung upon the branches. At last, the green path began to decline from its first tendency, and to wind among the hills and thickets, cooled with fountains, and murmuring with waterfalls.

5. Here Obidah paused for a time, and began to consider, whether it were longer safe to forsake the known and common track ; but, remembering that the heat was now in its greatest violence, and that the plain was dusty and uneven, he resolved to pursue the new path, which he supposed only to make a few meanders, in compliance with the varieties of the ground, and to end at last in the common road.

6. Having thus calmed his solicitude, he renewed his pace, though he suspected he was not gaining ground. This uneasiness of his mind inclined him to lay hold on every new object, and give way to every sensation that might soothe or divert him. He listened to every echo, he mounted every hill for a fresh prospect, he turned aside to every cascade, and pleased himself with tracing the course of a gentle river, that rolled among the trees, and watered a large region, with innumerable circumvolutions.

7. In these amusements, the hours passed away unaccounted : his deviations had perplexed his memory, and he knew not towards what point to travel. He stood pensive and confused, afraid to go forward lest he should go wrong, yet conscious that the time of loitering was now past. While he was thus tortured with uncertainty, the sky was overspread with clouds, the day vanished from before him, and a sudden tempest gathered round his head.

8. He was now roused, by his danger, to a quick and painful remembrance of his folly ; he now saw how happiness is lost when ease is consulted ; he lamented the unmanly impatience that prompted him to seek shelter in the grove, and despised the petty curiosity that led him on from trifle to trifle. While he was thus reflecting, the air grew blacker, and a clap of thunder broke his meditation.

9. He now resolved to do what remained yet in his power, —to tread back the ground which he had passed, and try to find some issue, where the wood might open into the plain. He prostrated himself upon the ground, and commended his life to the Lord of nature. He rose with confidence and tranquility, and pressed on with his saber in his hand ; for the beasts of the desert were in motion, and on every hand were heard the mingled howls of rage, and fear, and ravage, and expiration : all the horrors of darkness and solitude surrounded him ; the winds roared in the woods, and the torrents tumbled from the hills.

10. Thus, forlorn and distressed, he wandered through the wild, without knowing whither he was going, or whether he was every moment drawing nearer to safety or to destruction. At length, not fear, but labor, began to overcome him ; his breath grew short, and his knees trembled, and he was on the point of lying down, in resignation to his fate, when he beheld, through the brambles, the glimmer of a taper. He advanced towards the light, and finding that it proceeded from the cottage of a hermit, he called humbly at the door, and obtained admission. The old man set before him such provisions as he had collected for himself, on which Obidah fed with eagerness and gratitude.

11. When the repast was over, "Tell me," said the hermit, "by what chance thou hast been brought hither : I have been now twenty years an inhabitant of this wilderness, in which I never saw a man before." Obidah then related the occurrences of his journey, without any concealment or palliation.

12. "Son," said the hermit, "let the errors and follies, the dangers and escapes, of this day, sink deep into thy heart. Remember, my son, that human life is the journey of a day. We rise in the morning of youth, full of vigor, and full of expectation ; we set forward with spirit and hope, with gaiety and with diligence, and travel on a while in the straight road of piety, towards the mansions of rest. In a short time we remit our fervor, and endeavor to find some mitigation of our duty, and some more easy means of obtaining the same end.

13. "We then relax our vigor, and resolve no longer to be terrified with crimes at a distance, but rely upon our own constancy, and venture to approach what we resolve never to touch. We thus enter the bowers of ease, and repose in the shades of security. Here the heart softens, and vigilance subsides : we are then willing to inquire whether another advance cannot be made, and whether we may not, at least, turn our eyes upon the gardens of pleasure. We approach them with scruple and hesitation ; we enter them, but enter timorous and trembling, and always hope to pass through them without losing the road of virtue, which we, for a while, keep in our sight, and to which we propose to return.

14. "But temptation succeeds temptation, and one compliance prepares us for another ; we, in time, lose the happiness of innocence, and solace our disquiet with sensual gratifications. By degrees we let fall the remembrance of our original intention, and quit the only adequate object of rational desire. We entangle ourselves in business, immerge ourselves in luxury, and rove through the labyrinths of inconstancy, till the darkness of old age begins to invade us, and disease and anxiety obstruct our way. We then look back upon our lives with horror, with sorrow, and with repentance; and wish, but too often vainly wish, that we had not forsaken the paths of virtue.

15. "Happy are they, my son, who shall learn, from thy example, not to despair, but shall remember, that, though the day is past, and their strength is wasted, there yet remains one effort to be made; that reformation is never hopeless, nor sincere endeavors ever unassisted; that the wanderer may at length return, after all his errors: and that he, who implores strength and courage from above, shall find danger and difficulty give way before him. Go now, my son, to thy repose; commit thyself to the care of Omnipotence; and, when the morning calls again to toil, begin anew thy journey and thy life."

QUESTIONS.—1. What species of composition is this lesson? 2. Repeat the chief incidents of the story, with their appropriate moral. 3. Is it because we have but few men who are capable of becoming great, that so few distinguish themselves?

ERRORS.—ar-ly for ear-ly; 'muse-ments for a-muse-ments; lament-ed for la-ment-ed.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—1. caravansary, animated; 7. deviations, loitering; 9. tranquility; 10. resignation; 13. timorous; 14. labyrinths, gratifications.

LESSON CXXVI.

RULE.—In reading poetry that does not rhyme, there need be no pause at the end of lines terminating with unimportant words, except when the sense requires it.

Morning.—ANONYMOUS.

1. How lovely is the morn!
 Earth wakes like a young maiden from her sleep,
 And smiles. The playful breeze, that all night long
 Has sported with thy flowers, and sipped at will
 Their balmy breath, shakes freshness from its wings,
 And greets alike the fevered brow of care,

- Roused from his broken slumbers, and the cheek
Of cherub youth, which, sleeping, smiles as though
It dreamed of paradise. It visits e'en
10. The crowded city, and breaks in upon
The miser, gloating o'er his thrice-told heap
Of dross, a visiter unwelcome, for
Its purity reproves his heart impure.
Then perchance it greets the fading cheek
15. And wasted form, of one whose step was once
As light and joyous as the fairies' trip
In moonlit dance. In her ear it whispers
Hopes of happier days, and as it leaves her,
Sighs in sorrow for her fate, whose hopes
20. Before its next return, may all decay,
And nought be left behind, but the sad wreck
Of all that once was lovely.

Now the sun

- Appears, and with his golden beams illumines
25. The mountain's brow with hues of heaven, and wakes
The bustling earth from dull inaction. Now
The haunts of men, once more are seen teeming
With life; and birds and beasts once more rejoice
In their renewed existence. These again
30. With joyous twitter, seem to chirp their praise;
Those, in their various ways, their gratitude
Express, while thankless man, with eye scarce turned
To heaven, once more renews his toil, nor thinks
Of Him to whom he owes his life renewed,
35. His health preserved, his friends still true, and all
The countless blessings which have made this earth
A paradise.

QUESTIONS.—1. What is the character of a miser? 2. What does "told" signify, in the 11th line? 3. Who were the "fairies?" 4.
What does "these" refer to in line 29? 5. "Those," in line 31?

ERRORS.—Pure-ty for pu-ri-ty; par'-dise for par-a-dise; haunts for haunts; a-gin for a-gain.

SPELL AND DEFINE.—9. paradise; 11. gloating; 14. perchance; 24.
illumines; 27. teeming; 30. twitter.

LESSON CXXVII.

Woe to Ariel.—BIBLE.

1. Woe to Ariel! to Ariel!
The city where David dwelt:
Add ye year to year;
Let them kill sacrifices.
5. Yet I will distress Ariel!
And there shall be heaviness and sorrow;
And it shall be unto me as Ariel.
And I will camp against thee round about,
And I will lay siege against thee with a mount,
10. And I will raise forts against thee.
And thou shalt be brought down, and shalt speak out of the ground,
And thy speech shall be low out of the dust,
And thy voice shall be, as of one that hath a familiar spirit,
out of the ground,
And thy speech shall whisper out of the dust.
15. Moreover the multitude of thy strangers shall be like small dust.
And the multitude of the terrible ones shall be as chaff that passeth away:
Yea, it shall be at an instant suddenly.
Thou shalt be visited of the Lord of hosts
With thunder, and with earthquake, and great noise,
20. With storm and tempest,
And the flame of devouring fire.
And the multitude of all the nations
That fight against Ariel, (Even all that fight against her and her munition, and that distress her,)
25. Shall be as a dream of a night vision.
It shall even be
As when an hungry man dreameth, and, behold! he eateth;
But he awaketh! and his soul is empty:
Or, as when a thirsty man dreameth, and, behold! he drinketh;
30. But he awaketh—and, behold! he is faint, and his soul hath appetite:
So shall the multitude of all the nations be,
That fight against Mount Zion.
- Stay yourselves, and wonder!
Cry ye out, and cry!
35. They are drunken—but not with wine;
They stagger—but not with strong drink.
For the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep,

- And hath closed your eyes :
 The prophets, and your rulers, the seers hath he covered
40. And the vision of all is become unto you
 As the words of a book that is sealed,
 Which men deliver to one that is learned
 Saying, Read this, I pray thee :
 And he saith, I cannot ; for it is sealed :
45. And the book is delivered to him that is not learned,
 Saying, Read this, I pray thee :
 And he saith, I am not learned.
 Wherefore the Lord said,
 Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth,
 And with their lips do honor me,
 50. But have removed their heart far from me,
 And their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men :
 Therefore, behold ! I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people,
 Even a marvelous work and a wonder :
 For the wisdom of their wise men shall perish,
 55. And the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid.

LESSON CXXVIII.

The Proverbs of Solomon.—BIBLE.

1. A wise son maketh a glad father :
 But a foolish son is the heaviness of his mother.
 Treasures of wickedness profit nothing :
 But righteousness delivereth from death.
 The Lord will not suffer the soul of the righteous to famish :
 But he casteth away the substance of the wicked.
 He becometh poor that dealeth with a slack hand :
 But the hand of the diligent maketh rich.
2. He that gathereth in summer is a wise son :
 But he that sleepeth in harvest is a son that causeth shame.
 Blessings are upon the head of the just :
 But violence covereth the mouth of the wicked.
 The memory of the just is blessed :
 But the name of the wicked shall rot.
 The wise in heart will receive commandments :
 But a prating fool shall fall.
3. He that walketh uprightly walketh surely :
 But he that perverteth his ways shall be known.
 He that winketh with the eye causeth sorrow :
 But a prating fool shall fall.
 The mouth of a righteous man is a well of life :
 But violence covereth the mouth of the wicked.
 Hatred stirreth up strifes :
 But love covereth all sins.

4. In the lips of him that hath understanding wisdom is found :
But a rod is for the back of him that is void of understanding.
Wise men lay up knowledge :
But the mouth of the foolish is near destruction.
The rich man's wealth is his strong city :
The destruction of the poor is their poverty.
The labor of the righteous tendeth to life :
The fruit of the wicked to sin.
He is in the way of life that keepeth instruction :
But he that refuseth reproof erreth.
He that hideth hatred with lying lips,
And he that uttereth a slander, is a fool.
In the multitude of words there wanteth not sin :
But he that refraineth his lips is wise.
The tongue of the just is as choice silver :
The heart of the wicked is little worth.
6. The lips of the righteous feed many :
But fools die for want of wisdom.
The blessing of the Lord, it maketh rich,
And he addeth no sorrow with it.
It is as sport to a fool to do mischief :
But a man of understanding hath wisdom.
The fear of the wicked, it shall come upon him :
But the desire of the righteous shall be granted.
7. As the whirlwind passeth, so is the wicked no more :
But the righteous is an everlasting foundation.
As vinegar to the teeth, and as smoke to the eyes,
So is the sluggard to them that send him.
The fear of the Lord prolongeth days :
But the years of the wicked shall be shortened.
The hope of the righteous shall be gladness :
But the expectation of the wicked shall perish.
8. The way of the Lord is strength to the upright :
But destruction shall be to the workers of iniquity.
The righteous shall never be removed :
But the wicked shall not inhabit the earth.
The mouth of the just bringeth forth wisdom :
But the froward tongue shall be cut out.
The lips of the righteous know what is acceptable :
But the mouth of the wicked speaketh frowardness.

LESSON CXXIX.

Comfort ye my People.—BIBLE.

1. Comfort ye, comfort ye my people !
Saith your God.
Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her,
That her warfare is accomplished,

5. That her iniquity is pardoned :
For she hath received of the Lord's hand
Double for all her sins.

The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness,
Prepare ye the way of the Lord ;

10. Make straight in the desert a highway for our God !
Every valley shall be exalted,
And every mountain and hill shall be made low :
And the crooked shall be made straight,
And the rough places plain :
15. And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed,
And all flesh shall see it together :
For the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.—
The voice said, Cry ! And he said, What shall I cry ?
All flesh is grass,
20. And all the goodness thereof is as the flower of the field :
The grass withereth, the flower fadeth :
Because the spirit of the Lord bloweth upon it :
Surely the people is grass.
The grass withereth, the flower fadeth :
25. But the word of our God shall stand for ever.
O Zion, that bringest good tidings ! get thee up into the high mountain ;
O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings !
Lift up thy voice with strength ;
Lift it up, be not afraid ;
30. Say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God !
Behold ! the Lord your God will come with strong hand,
And his arm shall rule for him ;
Behold ! his reward is with him,
And his work before him.
35. He shall feed his flock like a shepherd :
He shall gather the lambs with his arm,
And carry them in his bosom,
And shall gently lead those that are with young.
Who hath measured the waters in the hollow of his hand,
40. And meted out heaven with the span,
And comprehended the dust of the earth in a measure,
And weighed the mountains in scales,
And the hills in a balance ?
Who hath directed the Spirit of the Lord,
45. Or, being his counselor, hath taught him ?
With whom took He counsel, and who instructed him,
And taught him in the path of judgment,
And taught him knowledge,
And showed to him the way of understanding ?
50. Behold ! the nations are as a drop of a bucket,
And are counted as the small dust of the balance :
Behold ! he taketh up the isles as a very little thing.
And Lebanon is not sufficient to burn,
Nor the beasts thereof sufficient for a burnt offering.

55. All nations before him are as nothing ;
And they are counted to him less than nothing, and vanity.
To whom then will ye liken God ?
Or what likeness will ye compare unto him ?
The workman melteth a graven image
60. And the goldsmith spreadeth it over with gold,
And casteth silver chains.
He that is so impoverished that he hath no oblation
Chooseth a tree that will not rot ;
He seeketh unto him a cunning workman to prepare a graven image, that shall not be moved.
65. Have ye not known ? have ye not heard ?
Hath it not been told you from the beginning ?
Have ye not understood from the foundations of the earth ?
It is He that sitteth upon the circle of the earth,
And the inhabitants thereof are as grasshoppers ;
70. That stretcheth out the heavens as a curtain,
And spreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in :
That bringeth the princes to nothing ;
He maketh the judges of the earth as vanity.
Yea—they shall not be planted ;
75. Yea—they shall not be sown :
Yea—their stock shall not take root in the earth :
And He shall also blow upon them, and they shall wither,
And the whirlwind shall take them away as stubble.
To whom then will ye liken Me,
80. Or shall I be equal ?
Saith the Holy One.
Lift up your eyes on high, and behold !
Who hath created these things ?
That bringeth out their host by number :
85. He calleth them all by names : by the greatness of his might, (for that he is strong in power)
Not one faileth.
Why sayest thou, O Jacob ! and speakest, O Israel !
My way is hid from the Lord,
And my judgment is passed over from my God ?
90. Hast thou not known ? hast thou not heard,
That the everlasting God, the Lord,
The Creator of the ends of the earth,
Fainteth not, neither is weary ?
There is no searching of his understanding.
95. He giveth power to the faint ;
And to them that have no might he increaseth strength.
Even the youths shall faint and be weary,
And the young men shall utterly fall :
But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength ;
100. They shall mount up with wings as eagles ;
They shall run, and not be weary ;
And they shall walk, and not faint.

LESSON CXXIX.

The Celestial City.—BIBLE.

1. And I saw heaven opened, and, behold! a white horse; and He that sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness He doth judge and make war. His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns; and He had a name written, that no man knew, but he himself. And He was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood: and his name is called, 'The Word of God. And the armies which were in heaven followed Him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean. And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it He should smite the nations: and He shall rule them with a rod of iron: and He treadeth the wine-press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God. And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS.

2. And I saw an angel standing in the sun; and he cried with a loud voice, saying to all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven, Come and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the great God! that ye may eat the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains; and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them, and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and great!

3. And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against Him that sat on the horse, and against his army. And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshiped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone. And the remnant were slain by the sword of Him that sat upon the horse, which sword proceeded out of his mouth: and all the fowls were filled with their flesh.

4. And I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the Dragon, that old Serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years, and cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled : and after that he must be loosed a little season.

5. And I saw thrones, and they that sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them : and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands ; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection ! on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.

6. And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle : the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city : and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them. And the Devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever.

7. And I saw a great white throne, and Him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away ; and there was found no place for them. And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God ; and the books were opened : and another book was opened, which is the book of life : and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it ; and Death and Hell delivered up the dead which were in them : and they were judged every man according to their works. And Death and Hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.

8. And I saw a new heaven and a new earth : for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away ; and there was no more sea. And I John saw the Holy City, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold ! the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away.

9. And He that sat upon the throne said, Behold! I make all things new. And He said unto me, Write: for these words are true and faithful. And he said unto me, It is done! I am Alpha and Omega, the Beginning and the End. I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely. He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son. But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the Second death.

10. And there came unto me one of the seven angels which had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues, and talked with me, saying, Come hither, I will show thee the Bride, the Lamb's wife. And he carried me away in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and showed me that great city, the Holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, having the glory of God.—And her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal; and had a wall great and high, and had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel: on the east three gates; on the north three gates; on the south three gates; and on the west three gates. And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb.

11. And he that talked with me had a golden reed to measure the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof. And the city lieth foursquare, and the length is as large as the breadth: and he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs. The length and the breadth and the height of it are equal. And he measured the wall thereof, an hundred and forty and four cubits, according to the measure of a man, that is, of the angel.—And the building of the wall of it was of jasper: and the city was pure gold, like unto clear glass. And the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. The first foundation was jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, a chalcedony; the fourth, an emerald; the fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chryso-the eighth, beryl; the ninth, a topaz; the tenth, a sapphire; the eleventh, a jacinth; the twelfth, an emerald. And the twelve gates were twelve pearls; every several gate was of one pearl; and the street of the city as pure gold, as it were transparent glass.

12. And I saw no temple therein: for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it. And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.—And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it: and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honor into it. And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day (for there shall be no night there;) and they shall bring the glory and honor of the nations into it. And there shall in nowise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie: but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life.

13. And he showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations. And there shall be no more curse: but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him: and they shall see his face; and his name shall be in their foreheads. And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord giveth them light: and they shall reign for ever and ever.

LESSON CXXX.

America.—National Hymn.—MASON'S*
SACRED HARP.

1. My country ! 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty,
Of thee I sing ;
Land, where my fathers died ;
Land of the pilgrims' pride ;
From every mountain side,
Let freedom ring.
2. My native country ! thee,
Land of the noble free,
Thy name I love :
I love thy rocks and rills,
Thy woods and templed hills ;
My heart with rapture thrills.
Like that above,
3. Let music swell the breeze,
And ring from all the trees,
Sweet freedom's song ;
Let mortal tongues awake,
Let all that breathe partake,
Let rocks their silence break,
The sound prolong.
4. Our fathers' God ! to thee,
Author of liberty !
To thee we sing ;
Long may our land be bright,
With freedom's holy light,
Protect us by thy might,
Great God, our King !
